

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

LONDON, JANUARY 16, 1847.

SOME observations have lately appeared in a public journal respecting the practice of counsel at the parliamentary bar. There is much in those observations with which we in substance agree, though the tone of some parts of them, is not very consistent with the importance which the writer professes to attach to the status of the bar. It is quite true, that, in this country, it is important to the public, that a body of men whose influence over the administration of justice is so great as is that of the bar, should not only maintain, but have the reputation of maintaining, a high tone of feeling, and, in particular, should look at their Profession rather as the means of obtaining honourable distinction, than mere money. It is right that such a position of the bar should be sustained by all the inducements that can be offered, and, if the inducements supplied by the desire of other men's esteem and by the dictates of ordinary principle are not sufficient, it is well that the adventitious aids of etiquette and special professional regulations should be called in. It is quite true, also, that, in order to attain and maintain such a position, the Profession ought not to offer to its members, as a matter of course, daily bread for daily labour. That is, or ought to be, the attribute of ordinary business pursued by ordinary men; whereas the tendency of the regulations for such a Profession as that of the bar, ought to be to fill it with men of capacity and energy far above the ordinary standard. The system, therefore, under which, in the ordinary pursuit of practice in the superior courts, counsel are (with very few exceptions) obliged to bide their time, and, during a long period of severe probation, (the endurance of which is of itself almost the only safe test of their possession of one of the most necessary qualities), to strengthen and mature their qualifications for business, is a system natural and proper for the maintenance of the Profession, if it is to remain a public body of public utility. Further, it is quite true, that the system which has of late grown up in parliamentary practice, has a tendency to deteriorate the status of the bar; and it has so for this simple reason, that it substitutes, to an enormous extent, patronage instead of professional character, as the cause and source of employment. It is impossible for a man who, either by the early development of extraordinary ability, or by the more tedious process of the determined application of ordinary ability, has fought his way in the courts of law or equity to a respectable position in business, to go into one of the committees, and not to be astonished at the number of very young juniors who are sitting at the committee-tables, covered with robes that have scarcely ceased to be redolent of the dyer's vat, and with tansures whose almost dazzling whiteness contrasts pleasingly with their rosy cheeks, and who are gaining there, in modest silence, incomes which would be thought brilliant by men leading behind the Bar in the ordinary courts, and wearing out body and soul in a daily toil of from twelve to fourteen hours. That many of these young men are men of talent is most probable; and that many, or most, of them might become in time good lawyers, is also highly probable; but it is quite impossible, that, without any severer training than their brethren undergo, their professional services in attending a parliamentary committee, occasionally examining a few witnesses, and very rarely addressing the committee, can be worth to their clients from five to ten times as much as those of men almost conducting causes in the courts of law and equity.

The truth is, (and it is well known), that, in the parliamentary committees, at least twice the number of counsel must be retained, that is at all likely to be required to conduct the business, not because the business requires in itself more counsel to conduct it than any other, but because parliamentary arrangements are such, that the presence of counsel much esteemed, cannot be counted upon with tolerable certainty. As it is calculated, and with great chances that the calculation is accurate, that the two or three supernumerary counsel will not be called upon to do or say anything, it is not as important to the clients as it is in ordinary business (where seldom more than two, and, at the outside, three counsel are allowed) that the supernumeraries should be men really what is technically called, "up to their work." The result is, that those in whose hands the retainer of parliamentary counsel is placed, having, with regard to a considerable number of their counsel, but slight responsibility as regards the conduct of the case, are more open to influence, and, therefore, the more readily may, and in fact do, succumb to mere patronage.

But, admitting the public evil, the question remains what is its cause, and what is the remedy? Now, it is the fashion to throw the cause upon the alleged rapacity of counsel, and to suppose that the remedy consists in Parliament exercising the very simple piece of despotism of dictating for what fees counsel should work; whereas the cause consists, as we most respectfully suggest, in the excessive greediness of Parliament for jurisdiction, and its equally excessive slovenliness in the exercise of its jurisdiction; and the remedy would almost of itself follow, if Parliament would so organise its committees as to insure competent judges and a regular bar. It is easy to talk, as laymen will talk, of the abolition of a daily fee, and to suppose that that daily fee is the stimulus to excessive protraction of business. The daily fee, however, seems inevitable, whenever there are no tolerable means of knowing the length of time that the trial of a case may last. In the courts of common law and equity, the average duration of the hearing of a cause is so easy to calculate, and so well known, that there is no difficulty in making counsel's fees irrespective of the mere time taken up in attending court: but who can venture to say, a priori, whether carrying a bill through committee will take three days or sixty? As to the other branch of the objection, we have practical proof that the daily fee does not produce on the part of counsel, unnecessary protraction of business; at least, where counsel are pleading before judges whose knowledge they can rely upon; for both in the House of Lords and in the Privy Council, the system as to fees is exactly the same as in Parliament; yet no one has ever heard of its being complained, that there counsel make prolix speeches or raise unnecessary or captious difficulties in order to increase their gains.

If the public really thinks it a grievance that such large sums should be paid to counsel by companies and their opponents in parliamentary committees, they should direct their clamour to the root of the evil, the loose and inefficient organisation of the committees themselves. Let them urge upon Parliament the formation of regular courts for the transaction of railway business, presided over by men of legal learning and judicial responsibility, whose reputation will attract, and whose capacity will enable them to control, a powerful and regular bar. Let this be done, and committee business, like other legal business, will be done without the expenditure, in counsel's fees, of more than is requisite to secure competent ability. But to talk of prescribing what amount of fees counsel shall receive for their services, or in what form they shall receive them, is as purely ridiculous as it would be to say, that Mr. Barry shall build the Houses of Parliament for so much, whether he will or not, and shall agree to receive his remuneration in silver, whether he will or not.

Subscribed Capital, £500,000.

Nov. 1846.

At a numerous Meeting of the Proprietors, held at the Company's Offices, 25, Pall Mall, on the 26th inst., it was shewn by the Report of the Auditors and Directors—

That this Company was the first to Assure DISEASED AND INVALID LIVES in a systematic manner, and on the same safe and defined principles as those on which ordinary Offices assure Healthy Lives; and that at the present time it is the only Company furnished with scientific and well-constructed Tables shewing the duration of life in the different classes and various stages of disease.

That the Public have felt the urgent necessity for a Company established on such principles, was rendered manifest by the fact, that during the period of five years in which the Society had been in business, no less than 2051 proposals had been made to it, covering Assurances to upwards of One Million of money. The number of Policies issued far exceeds the average of that of most of the old and successful Offices in a similar period; and the business has been gradually progressive, the number of Policies issued during the last year being nearly triple that in the first year of the Society's existence; shewing, that, as the establishment of the Company has become more generally known, the Public has more freely embraced the peculiar advantages which it offers, thus affording every reason to believe that the business of the Company will still go on rapidly increasing.

That the number of deaths that have taken place has been under the number estimated by the Tables of the Society by nearly ten per cent.; a strong proof of the safety and correctness of the data and principles on which they are founded; and that these facts conclusively shew, that business in INVALID LIVES can be transacted with as much safety as that in HEALTHY LIVES; that the prejudice which once prevailed against this class of business is rapidly disappearing; and that there are few Companies which are not satisfied that this kind of Assurance may be done with security and profit, so much so that several have now become anxious for it. That it is also gratifying to be able to state, that a very large proportion of old-established Offices have lately co-operated with this Society by sending it a considerable amount of business.

That the Public have derived a great benefit from the establishment of this Company, is shewn by the fact, that 66 per cent. of the Lives Assured had been rejected by other Offices; thus extending the highly valuable benefits of Life Assurance to a large section of the community not embraced by other Companies. This result will be the better understood when it is stated, that, in the mature period of life the deaths from one disease only, Consumption, in the principal towns of England, are more than one-third of the total deaths in the same period of life. And if an inquiry be instituted into the prevalence of other diseases also, such as Asthma, Dropsy, Diseases of the Head, Heart, &c., it will be found that more than one-half of the whole Population would, on medical examination, be refused admission into ordinary Assurance Offices.

The diseases here alluded to are such as exist in general in a chronic form, frequently for many years prior to death, but which, on a strict medical examination, would effectually exclude the persons so affected from the benefits of Life Assurance; and since it thus appears that a majority of the population is included in this class, the value and importance of the new feature of this Society cannot fail to be justly appreciated.

That the published document by this Society shews—

In the first place, That the peculiar features of this Society open a larger field for business than all other Offices can have unitedly; and

In the second place, That the risk of Assuring Diseased Lives must, from its own nature, be less, and its principles be found to rest on a more satisfactory basis, than those which regulate ordinary Assurances.

That Premiums have been determined for the Assurance of persons at every age, among those afflicted with consumption, asthma, bronchitis, pneumonia, disease of the heart, apoplexy, paralysis, epilepsy, insanity, disease of the liver, dropsy, scrofula, gout, rheumatism, &c.

That in all cases where satisfactory proof is given that the causes for an increased rate of Premium have ceased, a reduction in the Premium is made.

Increased Annuities are granted on Unsound Lives.

No extra Premium required on Healthy Lives, in the Army or Navy, unless in actual service.

HEALTHY LIVES, both at Home and in Foreign Climates, are Assured with as much facility, and at lower rates, than at most other Offices; and a capital of Half-a-Million sterling fully subscribed affords a complete guarantee for the fulfilment of the Company's engagements.

LONDON, JANUARY 23, 1847.

It is generally believed, both in and out of the Profession, that measures are in active progress for the establishment in practice of the county courts under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 95, and that within a very short period of time the public may expect to have the benefit of the new jurisdiction. We have often, in the pages of this Journal, and that long ago, when county courts were talked of, but with little hope that they would be speedily organised and brought into existence, urged the propriety of giving to such courts, if formed at all, an equity as well as a common-law jurisdiction.

Since we commenced this equitable agitation, many changes have taken place in the law and in the practice of the law which, if such a jurisdiction was then necessary, have made it now doubly desirable. Among other things, the Legislature has interfered to facilitate the transfer of real property and to shorten conveyances; and, if it has not been successful in all its efforts, it has at least aided the growing tendency of the public to seek, and of the Profession to adopt, with reference to property of small amount, a practice in conveyancing distinguished by endeavours at simplification and brevity, calculated to render estates susceptible of regular sale, and mortgage, and settlement, which, under the old practice, were quite unavailable as an exchangeable commodity.

The result of this is of course a growing increase of causes of equitable litigation among a class of persons, and in reference to a class of estates, for which the assistance of the High Court of Chancery is quite unattainable. Imagine a suit in Chancery to ascertain and settle the claims of devisees of an estate of the value of 200l., and the priorities of incumbrancers on the shares of one or more such devisees; or a fighting suit for specific performance, upon a contract perhaps for 100l., to be made out by letters passing between two petty farmers!

Formerly, to such an observation the answer would have been, that it is better that such little litigations should be nipped in the bud, and that, when people of small means cannot go to law about their trifling purchases and trivial rights, they will settle them out of court. Whatever might have been the weight of such an argument, the principle of it was given up when the Legislature passed the County Courts Act; because it is obvious, that every argument which is applicable to the alleged impolicy of permitting equity litigation in reference to small matters, is equally applicable to shew the impolicy of permitting general litigation at law about 20l. debts. And as the Legislature has declared that it is politic to give the means of settling such legal questions, so ought it, if the existence can be shewn of a mass of equitable claims incapable of being settled by any existing jurisdiction, to afford to the people the possession of a competent tribunal for such matters.

Now, can it be doubted that such a mass of small equitable claims does exist? We ask every conveyancer and every Chancery practitioner, whether it has not frequently occurred to him in practice, to advise against proceedings in Chancery, admitting that, without such proceeding, no satisfactory result can be arrived at, simply because the smallness of the estate or fund, the subject of dispute, would be utterly annihilated, perhaps, before even getting so far as a preliminary decree for inquiries, and inevitable before reaching a final hearing of the cause. Practically, it may be said, without the fear of contradiction, that there is no tribunal whatever in this country that can adjust purely equitable claims, where the property at stake does not exceed 200l.; and at or about that we should be disposed to place the maximum of value that should be litigated in equity in county courts.

Many also of the objections of a practical character that could formerly have been speciously made to the creation of a petty equity jurisdiction, are now rendered impossible by the creation of the county courts. There will be in existence courts with all their staff and machinery; there will be judges all ready to judge; clerks and officers all ready to take accounts and make inquiries; treasurers to act as accountants-general; taxing officers, bailiffs,—everything in short requisite to carry on litigation. All the materiel will exist; and the only thing remaining to be done will be to give jurisdiction, and to frame rules and orders as to procedure,—a task which would not be of excessive difficulty.

It might be a question, whether, if such a jurisdiction were given to county courts, it would be better that every court should be a court both of law and equity, or that certain of the courts should be exclusively courts of equity. That would be a question of detail, which would probably not be found of insuperable difficulty, if the Legislature were once to determine upon adopting the principle.

Viewing, then, the unquestionable existence of subjects of equitable litigation, for which there is no accessible jurisdiction; the unavoidable inference in regard to the policy of permitting such litigation, arising from the declared opinion of the Legislature in reference to subjects of common-law litigation; and the practical facilities afforded by the establishment of the county courts, for the introduction into the jurisprudence of this country, of courts of equity as well as courts of law for the poor man, we conceive, that, in urging again and again this subject upon the notice of the Profession, we shall be doing, in our very humble sphere, some service to the State.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Jan. 19.—Lord Denman, C. J., delivered the judgment of the court in the following cases:—

Belcher v. Gumtow.—Rule for new trial absolute.

Willoughby v. Willoughby.—Rule absolute, unless defendant tender a bill of exceptions, which he is at liberty to do, as at the trial.

Reg. v. The Mayor, &c. of Dover.—Judgment for the Crown.

Jan. 21.—“The Court will, on Tuesday the 2nd of February next, and the two following days, and on Monday the 8th of February, and four following days, hold sittings, and dispose of cases in the New Trial Paper, Crown Paper, and Special Paper, and give judgment in cases then pending.”

BY THE COURT.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Jan. 21.—This court will hold sittings on Saturday, the 6th day of February next; also on Monday, the 8th day of February next, and the five next following days; and on Monday, the 15th day of February next; and will proceed in disposing of the business then pending in the New Trial Paper and in the Special Paper; and, on Monday, the 22nd day of February next, to deliver judgment in all cases then standing for judgment.

BY THE COURT.

Read in open court,—E. Bennett.

A Treatise on the Stamp Laws in Great Britain and Ireland: being an Analytical Digest of the Statutes and Cases, with Practical Observations thereon, and a Table of Stamp Duties payable throughout the Kingdom. By HUGH TISLEY, Assistant Solicitor of Stamps and Taxes. 8vo., pp. 692.

[London: Stevens & Norton.]

Gentlemen in official situations are seldom very successful when they undertake to write on the subjects with which they are, or ought to be, best acquainted. Whether it be that office is seldom worthily bestowed, or that official aptitude is incompatible with what Bacon calls “the faculty of tradition,” we do not know; but certain it is, that, from “The Lincoln’s Inn Guide” and “Rigge on Registration” upwards, few works bearing the official stamp have been worth much. When we saw this work announced, and remembered the very curious dicta as to stamps that to our knowledge have occasionally emanated from Somerset House, we did not expect to see an exception to the rule. We have been agreeably disappointed; for an exception the present work is, and a very striking one. Mr. Tisley is evidently a gentleman of considerable ability and industry, and would have written well and soundly on the subject, even if his employment had not made it peculiarly his own*; and in legal apprehension alone (a qualification which he certainly has not acquired at the Stamp Office) he fairly beats his predecessors and rivals, Messrs. Chitty and Collins. The cases are well stated, and acutely criticised. But this is not all: the book is complete†, and admirably arranged for reference; and these merits we place to the credit of its official origin. It is a perfect working book of reference, and bears internal evidence of having been originally compiled, as the author says, for the use of himself, and those associated with him in his official duties. The table of contents will shew the plan and scope of the work:—

“Introductory matter relating to subjects of a general character connected with the Stamp Duty on Instruments—Advertisements—Affidavits—Agreements—Appointments to Offices—Appraisements and Appraisers—Awards—Apprentices—Articled Clerks—Attorneys and Solicitors, &c.—Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, Bankers—Bills of Lading, Charter-party, Certificate on Debentures for Drawback—Bonds—Cards and Dice—Conveyance on Sale—Copyhold Estate—Denoting Stamp—Discount and Allowances, Drawback—Forgery, Fraud—Instruments, general enactments relating to (sub-divisions: 1. The local extent of the Stamp

* Mr. Tisley refers, in his Preface, to a supposed effect of his belonging to the junior branch of the Profession, upon “the estimate of his production, whatever may be its real merit.” This looks like feigned modesty, and is, to say the least of it, a sentiment of great injustice. Members of the senior branch of the Profession will use a good book, whether its author be a barrister, or a solicitor, or a layman.

† We must make one qualification. Mr. Tisley mentions, both in a separate chronological table, and under each head in the body of the work, all the repealed statutes by which stamp duties were imposed; but he does not state the amounts of the duties which they imposed on instruments of a permanent character,—information which is not easily obtained, because, in the current editions of the Statutes at Large, the titles only of those repealed stamp acts are printed. In his next edition, we hope the author will give a table of all the stamps that have ever been imposed on instruments of a permanent nature. Something of this sort is, we believe, done in Mr. Coventry’s work,—a book, like the rest of that gentleman’s productions, well conceived and badly executed. Mr. Tisley has a table, which he entitles “Table of Duties payable prior to 10th October, 1804,” but, if we are not mistaken, it does not include all the duties to which we refer.

Laws; 2. The Stamping of executed Instruments; 3. The Admission of unstamped Instruments in Evidence for collateral Purposes, and herein as to Secondary Evidence; 4. Instruments relating to several Parties and Matters; 5. Alterations after Execution; 6. Time for Objecting to Sufficiency of Stamp; 7. Inforcing Production of Instrument to be stamped; 8. Special Pleading with reference to Stamps; 9. Instruments subject to the common Deed Duty)—Insurance—Lease—License to sell Stamps—Medicines—Mortgages—Newspapers—Pawnbrokers—Penalties for Offences—Plate—Postage Stamps—Progressive Duties—Public Officers—Receipts—Schedules—Spoiled Stamps—Stamp, various general Enactments—Surrender, Release, Renunciation, Disclaimer—Probate Duty—Legacy Duty—Table of present Stamp Duties (being the Schedule to the General Stamp Act, enlarged and corrected according to the existing laws)—Table of Duties payable prior to 10th October, 1804.

Appendix—A second form of instrument written on paper stamped for one instrument only; Hackney Carriages; Hawkers and Pedlars; Railways; Stage Carriages; Abstract of Statutes in Ireland relating to Stamp Duties; List of Statutes granting Stamp Duties in Great Britain, or otherwise relating thereto.

Addenda.

Index to Irish Statutes.*

The arrangement is alphabetical, and under each head the statutes, as well those repealed as those in force, are referred to in order; and then the cases are stated. The decision on the construction of the Stamp Acts are, as our readers are aware, very numerous and very important, and they unfortunately constitute the only help which the practitioner can obtain for the solution of the perplexing questions that are constantly arising; for, as is remarked in the introductory part of the work, (page 10), the Commissioners of Stamps and Taxes have no authority given by the Legislature to decide, "or, by any act of theirs, (except in the instance of denoting stamps in particular cases specially provided for), to preclude inquiry as to the sufficiency of the stamp on any instrument," the courts not being "in the habit of referring to the Stamp Office on any question before them." Mr. Tilsley adds, "Of course, neither the commissioners nor their officers are responsible for the consequences of a deficiency of duty on any instrument stamped after it is executed; for, although they refuse to impress a duty which is palpably insufficient*, they, in cases of doubt, allow parties to exercise their own discretion, at the same time not withholding advice; and it may reasonably be presumed, that, whenever a doubt is really entertained upon any point, a recommendation is never given to take the lower stamp. It certainly is by no means probable, that, in any instance where a question is suggested whether the stamp should be the common deed duty or one of less amount, a party is advised to be content with the latter if the point be one of real difficulty."

The work is not limited to the laws as, before the passing of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 82, they affected England, and their operation since the date of that statute, but extends also to those which in any way regulate the stamp duties in Ireland; and within its scope will be found a very carefully compiled collection of, we believe, all the statutory enactments relating to stamps which have ever been in force in any part of the United Kingdom, from the 5 W. & M. c. 21, in the year 1694, down to the present time.

In illustration of our author's mode of discussing the authorities, we shall give two extracts. The first will be found at page 302, where, after speaking of the principle of lex loci contractus with reference to the stamp duties of a foreign country, Mr. Tilsley thus proceeds:—

"Alves v. Hodgson and Clegg v. Levy are generally referred to as establishing a distinction between foreign independent states and the British colonies; but no allusion was made to any such distinction in the judgment in either case, nor was any argument attempted to be founded upon it on one side or the other; and the broad principle upon which the decisions were come to admits of no limit in its operation. The point seems to have been recently entertained by the Court of Common Pleas, by granting a rule nisi to set aside a verdict obtained on two bills not stamped according to the law of Belgium. Conceding, however, such principle to be altogether repudiated in the case of foreign powers, the reason for it, viz. the absence of necessity, does not apply to the British colonies."

At p. 11, after referring to the case of Doe d. Fryer v. Coombes, deciding, that, prima facie, a deed which bore the appearance of having had a stamp upon it, but the amount of which, in consequence of the parchment being worn and obliterated, could not be ascertained, was admissible in evidence, it is said—

"This case must be received with a due consideration of all the circumstances attending it, and was not intended as an authority on all occasions where a stamp is destroyed. The decision was founded in reason. Here was an old deed, which, from want of due care, had become almost illegible; the deed itself and the stamp upon it were in a state of premature decay; there was evidence of a stamp having been impressed; and, under the circumstances, the court was justified in presuming it to be correct. Except in cases of a similar description, no such presumption is warranted; but, on the contrary, the suspicion naturally arises, where the stamp is obliterated, that such stamp was improper, unless the deed itself, as well as the stamp, appears to have undergone a material change either from natural decay or some accidental cause."

We shall now refer to one or two positions in which we cannot agree with our author. At p. 479 he states, without disapproval, the decision in Pierpoint v. Gouer, (5 Scott, N. R., 605; 6 Jur. 952), that a mortgage given as a further security for a debt previously secured by a warrant of attorney, is exempted from the ad-valorem duty by the 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, s. 3, which mentions bonds only, and adds, "a warrant of attorney and a bond is for this purpose the same." The decision is clearly erroneous, as we have shewn in another place (8 Jur. 43); a warrant of attorney is not, for any purpose, a bond.

At p. 477, Mr. Tilsley quarrels with the decision in Sellick v. Trevor, (11 Mee. & W. 722), that a deed of covenant to accompany a conditional surrender by way of mortgage of copyholds is sufficiently stamped with the ad-valorem duty, where that duty is 2*l.* or under. We think that the decision was correct, though the grounds of it were not very happily expressed by the court. The title "Mortgages," in the schedule to the Stamp Act, has a provision for the case of "several distinct deeds or instruments falling within the description of any of the instruments hereby charged with the ad-valorem duty on mortgages" being made at the same time for recovering the same sum; and it directs, that the ad-valorem duty, if it exceeds 2*l.*, is to be charged on one only of such instruments, the others being liable to such duty as may attach on them under any more general head in the schedule; and the parties are to be at liberty to determine which instrument is to bear the ad-valorem duty. But then follows a proviso, that, in the case of a mortgage of copyholds by conditional surrender or grant, the ad-valorem stamp is to be affixed to the surrender or grant, no option being left to the parties. In other respects, the preceding provision for the case of several instruments is left untouched, so that where the ad-valorem duty does not exceed 2*l.*, and there is a conditional surrender and an accompanying mortgage deed, both are liable to the ad-valorem duty only. This was the case in Sellick v. Trevor, where the accompanying deed contained covenants for title, a covenant to pay the mortgage debt, and a power of sale, and the amount being 100*l.*, the deed was held liable to a duty of 1*l.* 10*s.* only. The deed was clearly a mortgage in equity. Mr. Tilsley says it was no mortgage, and adds, that, in the case of a covenant to surrender copyholds, if a surrender be never made, but the person lending the money remains satisfied with the covenant, there is then no mortgage, and, consequently, no ad-valorem duty. This is a mistake: a covenant to surrender copyholds by way of mortgage is unquestionably an equitable mortgage, and would be enforced in Chancery, if no surrender were made. Such a covenant, when the surrender is made at the same time, is exempted from the ad-valorem duty (if it exceed 2*l.*) by the proviso referred to; but if the surrender is not made at the time of executing the deed, the deed is plainly liable to the ad-valorem duty.

At p. 224, Mr. Tilsley cites authority to shew that any acknowledgment of a debt, if under seal, is a bond; and adds, "a covenant to pay money cannot be made liable to a stamp duty as a bond, unless it be a bond." Granted: but this is surely disposing in too ambiguous and summary a manner of the important question, whether an unqualified covenant to pay a sum certain is not liable to the ad-valorem duty on bonds. See 3 Jarm. Conv., 3rd ed., p. 361.

We shall probably take an early opportunity to notice some other interesting points, which want of space obliges us at present to pass over.

LONDON, JANUARY 30, 1847.

We have selected for the subject of some remarks the case of Wilson v. Lord Curzon, reported in our last number, (p. 47), because it throws some additional light on the character of a promoter of a railway company. The plaintiff sued for his salary as secretary to the "Canterbury and Herne Bay Railway Company," of which the defendant was a committee-man. The company had been provisionally registered, with the name of the plaintiff as one of its promoters, and on this ground it was decided that he could not recover against the defendant as a member of the committee. It was suggested by the court that he might have recovered had he shewn that the defendant contracted in his individual capacity. In the words of Baron Parke, "The plaintiff is one of the promoters of the company, and the question therefore is, is he not so deeply implicated in the scheme that all the acts of the provisional committee must be considered as his acts, and consequently that he is one of his own employers? Now, the provisional committee are delegated by others to act for them; primâ facie they act for the promoters, and therefore, primâ facie, orders given by them are the orders of all the projectors including the plaintiff, unless he has elected to give credit to some particular persons among them. The plaintiff, therefore, was bound in this case to give further evidence to shew that the defendant meant to contract as a principal, independent of his acts as provisional committee-man of the company." And it was observed by Mr. Baron Alderson, "This is the case of a man appointing himself to an office, and if he is to be paid at all,—which, however, I doubt,—he appoints himself, and must therefore pay himself; it is Holmes v. Higgins over again. This seems like the case of a club, where one member writes for the rest, and is called the secretary."

It is, therefore, now decided, that a registered promoter of a company cannot recover against the provisional committee of it, as such, for services in doing things incidental to its formation. This is not on the ground that they are partners. It was decided in Reynell v. Lewis and Wild v. Hopkins, (10 Jur. 972), that the relation of provisional committee-men creates neither a partnership nor a quasi partnership, as, although they are associated for the promotion of one common object, it does not constitute an agreement to share profit or loss, and the same reasoning would apply to the relation in which the registered promoter stands to the committee. The principle of the decision is the identity of interest which exists among co-promoters of a scheme, simply considered as such. There is no more reason for the secretary, being also a promoter, to be allowed to sue the committee, than that the committee should be allowed to sue the secretary, as such promoter, for their trouble and attendance*.

The majority of the cases on this subject have proceeded on the question of partnership, but they tend, as we have said, to illustrate this principle. In Holmes v. Higgins, (1 B. & C. 74; S. C., 2 D. & R. 196), the defendant had acted as chairman of a projected company, of which the plaintiff, a subscriber, was appointed agent; and the plaintiff having sued the defendants for business done in that capacity, the Court of King's Bench held that he could not recover; and, per Abbott, C. J., "If a number of persons associate together for the purpose of carrying on some undertaking for their joint benefit, and any one of them is employed as surveyor or agent for the purpose of carrying the object in view into effect, the question is, whether that person does not stand in the situation of one who himself is to be considered as an employer, and liable to contribute to the expense of his own employment. I think he is; and on that ground I think this action cannot be maintained. . . . If he (the defendant) had given any personal undertaking to pay the expenses incurred by the plaintiff, that might entail a liability upon him."

* There is, without doubt, a strong analogy between the interest of co-promoters and of partners, as far as regards a community of object; and the rules of law applicable in this respect to the one will be found also applicable to the other.

The case of Parkin v. Fry (2 C. & P. 311) more nearly resembles the principal case of which we are treating. There the plaintiff was the inventor of a scheme, and had procured gentlemen to act as a committee, with the intention of forming a joint-stock company to carry it into effect, and he himself acted as secretary. It was ruled by Abbott, C. J., that he could not recover against a member of that committee, and this ruling was upheld by the court above. The learned judge at the trial said, "If the gentlemen had sent for the plaintiff to assist them, it would have been different; but he is plainly the first mover and instigator of it."

There are numerous cases which establish, that, even in cases of partnership, if the contract be entered into before the commencement, or after the termination, of the partnership, the contracting party may recover for such services as were rendered before or after he became a partner. Thus, in Lucas v. Beach, (1 Scott, N. R., 350), the plaintiff had contracted to do certain work for a joint-stock company, and afterwards caused his name to be inserted in the books as a holder of shares in the company. In an action at his suit against the chairman of the committee, it was held that he was entitled to recover for the work done before the shares were allotted to him.

The facts in Day v. Sharp, recently decided in the Court of Queen's Bench, (7 Law Times, 62), resemble in several respects those in the above case of Wilson v. Lord Curzon. Both plaintiff and defendant became about the 10th of October committee-men of a railway company, and their names were published as such. On the 16th of October, the plaintiff was appointed secretary to the company, and in subsequent prospectuses he was mentioned as secretary, and not as a committee-man. These prospectuses were brought to the knowledge of defendant.

On these facts, the plaintiff was held entitled to recover for his services, from the date of his appointment as secretary.

It was said by Lord Denman, C. J.: "It seems to me that this is the case of several partners agreeing with one among their number that he should cease to hold that character, and should assume another." And per Patteson, J.—"I think that the defendant is estopped by his own acts."

It appears, therefore, from this summary of the cases, that the registered promoter of a railway company cannot recover from the committee of it, unless they have rendered themselves liable as principals, and independently of their character of committee-men, or unless the cause of action has arisen either before he assumed, or since he has divested himself of, the office of a co-promoter.

ERRATA.—In the review of Mr. Tilsley's work on the Stamp Laws, ante, p. 11, line 17, col. 2, for "necessity" read "reciprocity;" at line 26, for "and" read "it;" at line 34, for "to be" read "to have been."

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

The origin of the writ of mandamus is not precisely known: the use of it is said by some (Dr. Widdrington's case, Levins. 23; Show, 263, 274; Appleford's case, 1 Mod. 37, 82) to be of modern date, and to owe its rise to Bagg's case, (11 Rep. 94); but others hold it to be far more ancient, and that instances are upon record of such a writ having been granted in the reigns of Edward the First and Edward the Third. (10 Mod. 57*). Then, again, it has been said to be founded on the following passage in Magna Charta. (Sir G. Heathcote's case, 10 Mod. 53). 29th Chapter of Magna Charta:—"Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur aut disceisetur de libero tenemento suo, vel libertatibus, vel liberis consuetudinibus suis, aut utlagetur, aut exuletur, aut aliquo modo destruat, nec super eum ibimus, nec super eum mittemus, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum, vel per legem terræ. Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus aut differimus iustitiam vel rectum."

Whatever may have been the origin of the writ, and whether these surmises as to the precise period of its introduction be correct, is not very material to inquire, except as a matter of curiosity to the antiquarian. It is sufficient for our purpose to know, that it is a well-established remedy, and every day made use of to oblige inferior courts and magistrates to do that justice which, without such writ, they are in duty, and by virtue of their offices, obliged to do.

The writ of mandamus is a command issuing in the king's name from the Court of King's Bench, and directed to any person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within the king's dominions, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, which appertains to their office and duty, and which the Court of King's Bench has previously determined, or at least supposes to be consonant to right and justice. It is a high prerogative writ of a most extensively remedial nature, and may be issued in some cases where the injured party has also another more tedious method of redress; as in the case of admission or restitution to an office: but it issues in all cases where the party hath a right to have anything done, and hath no other specific means of compelling its performance.

The writ is grounded on a suggestion by the oath of the party injured, of his own right, and the denial of justice below; whereupon, in order more fully to satisfy * Upon reference to the ancient calendars and inventories of the Treasury of the Exchequer, published for the record commissioners by direction of His late Majesty William the Fourth, I find instances of mandatory writs having been granted in the reign of Edward the Third: one is a writ commanding the treasurer and chamberlains of the Exchequer to deliver to John Stonore, C. J. of the Bench, and Herle's successor, the rolls which had been brought in by the latter. (Vol. 3, p. 148). There is also another writ, directing the treasurer and chamberlains of the Exchequer to deliver to Edmund Mortimer, son of Roger Mortimer, of Wigmore, the furniture, &c., and other similar articles in his Castle of Wigmore. (Id. pp. 163, 432). The rolls of King Richard the First and King John are the earliest consecutive judicial records now existing. As I have been unable to find any mention of the writ anterior to the reign of Edward the Third, it is probable, that, if the writ of mandamus existed before that period, and which there is every reason to suppose that it did, all traces that might have been discovered are lost, in consequence of the defective state of the rolls previous to the reign of Richard the First. (1 Rot. Curie Regis, Intro.).

† There is a writ called "a mandamus," which lay where the king's tenant, who held of him by knight's service, died, his heir within age, and no writ of diem clausit extremum, &c., was sued out within a year and a day after his death; there issued a mandamus to the escheator, commanding him to inquire of what lands holden by knight's service the tenant died seized &c. (Vide F. N. B. 561; Bac. Abr. "Mand." A.; 15 Vin. Abr., "Mand." 185).

the court that there is a probable ground for such interposition, a rule is made (except in some general cases, where the probable ground is manifest, and which will be noticed hereafter) directing the party complained of to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue; and if no sufficient cause be shewn, the writ itself is issued—at first, in the alternative either to do thus, or signify some reason to the contrary, to which a return or answer must be made at a certain day. And if the inferior judge or other person to whom the writ is directed, returns or signifies an insufficient reason, then there issues in the second place a peremptory mandamus to do the thing absolutely; to which no other return will be admitted but a certificate of perfect obedience, and due execution of the writ. If the inferior judge or other person makes no return, or fails in his respect and obedience, he is punishable for his contempt by attachment. But if he at first returns a sufficient cause, although it should be false in fact, the Court of King's Bench will not try the truth of the fact upon affidavits, but will for the present believe him, and proceed no further on the mandamus. But then the party injured may have an action against him for his false return, and (if found to be false by the jury) shall recover damages equivalent to the injury sustained, together with a peremptory mandamus to the defendant to do his duty. (3 B. C. 110, 111).

The power of issuing writs of mandamus belongs in general exclusively to the Court of Queen's Bench*, and is one of the highest and most important branches of the jurisdiction of that court: it has been figuratively treated as its principal flower, being in the nature of a bill in equity for a specific performance. (Andoley v. Jay, Poph. 176). It is, however, granted by that court principally for public purposes, and to enforce performance of public rights or duties; and, generally speaking, it is issued only to enforce a public right or a public duty, and then only when the party applying has no other specific remedy.

Having premised thus much with regard to the origin and nature of the writ of mandamus, we will now proceed to inquire—

Firstly. In what cases the court will grant a mandamus.

Secondly. When the court will not grant a mandamus.

Thirdly. As to the practical proceedings in moving for the writ.

Fourthly. As to the return of the writ.

Lastly. As to the costs on granting the writ.

At common law, if the members of a corporation refused or neglected to choose such proper officers as they were bound, it was a forfeiture of their charter, though, upon the death of a mayor or other chief magistrate of boroughs or corporations within the year, the Court of King's Bench was authorised to grant a mandamus immediately to fill up the vacancy thus happening; but where there was an omission to elect upon the charter-day, or do such acts as the charter required to be done in order to perfect the election, or upon the removal of an officer unduly chosen, there was no power to compel an election, or the performance of such necessary acts, in order to complete an election before the day came round again to supply those defects, (Res v. The Mayor of Tregony, 8 Mod. 129); for the court, to compel the corporation to proceed to an election on any other day than that named in the charter, would, instead of enforcing obedience to the king's charter, be acting directly in opposition to it. Where they had no power by their charter to choose on any other day, the corporation would be dissolved, rather than they should make an election on any other day. This omission to elect on the proper day named in the charter might arise from inadvertence, or perhaps be owing to design, of the person who ought to have held the court or presided at the assembly where the election was to be made: the inconvenience was the same in either case: a forfeiture of the charter might be incurred, and the dissolution of the corporation ensue. (Selw. N. P. 1070). For, if the election did not take place at the time prescribed by the charter, there was no provision in the charter for the old officer continuing on; until a new one was elected, the corporation was dissolved. (Banbury Corporation, 10 Mod. 346). The serious evils resulting from the state of the law as it then stood were brought more immediately under the consideration of the Legislature by the case of The Mayor of the Borough of Tiverton, who, in 1723, absented himself from the borough on the charter-day for electing his successor: no new mayor could be chosen; the corporation was therefore dissolved in the year following. The Crown was applied to for a new charter, when the matter was referred to the then Attorney and Solicitor-General (Sir P. Yorke and Sir Clement Weary) for their opinion. In their report, they mention the case of Banbury; and, after observing that the decision there had not been contradicted by any subsequent opinion of the court, they say, "That they apprehend it comes up to the case before them, and is clear authority in law that the corporation of Tiverton is at an end." They therefore advise the King to grant a new charter by statute. (2 Doug. P. C. 40). To remedy the inconveniences that attended the power which the presiding officers of corporations had of dissolving them, arising from the defective state of the common law, the Legislature, after the decisions in the case of The Corporation of Banbury, (10 Mod. 346), and the report of the Attorney and Solicitor-General in the Tiverton case, (2 Doug. Contr. Elect. 63), (which gave rise to the statute), deemed it advisable, in order to prevent the forfeiture of the charters of corporations upon the omission to elect at the charter-day, or to do such acts as were by the charter required to be done in order to complete the election, and at the same time to restrain the power which the Crown would otherwise have to remodel all corporations upon the death of mayors, &c., to pass a statute, (11 Geo. 1, c. 4), by which it was enacted, that, if in any city, borough, or town corporate in England, Wales, and Berwick-upon-Tweed, no election shall be made of the mayor, (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 49, post; 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 4), bailiff, or other chief officer, upon the day and within the time appointed by the charter or usage, (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 49), or, such election being made, shall afterwards become void, whether such omission or avoidance shall happen through the default of the officer who ought to hold the court, or preside, or, by any accidental or other means, the corporation shall not thereby be dissolved or disabled from electing such officers; but in any case where no election shall be made as aforesaid, the members of the corporation may meet at the Town-hall, or other usual place of meeting for making such election, upon the next day after the expiration of the time within which such election ought to have been made, unless such day shall be Sunday, and then on the Monday following, between the hours of ten in the morning and two in the afternoon*; and that the members and persons having a right to vote shall forthwith proceed to an election; and in case, upon the day of meeting, the mayor or other proper officer who ought to hold the court or preside at the election shall be absent, then the person having a right to vote being the nearest present in office to the person so absent shall hold the court or preside at the meeting, and have the same powers as the officer or person who ought so to have presided. (Sect. 1).

* By 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44, the courts at Westminster may award a writ of mandamus for the examination of witnesses in India, arising out of any suit pending in the superior courts. This is a statutory exception to the rule. (Savage v. Disney, 2 Dowl. 648).

* It appears the time is not essential; this mention of hours in the statute is certainly directory, and not restrictive, and intended to prevent surprise by beginning at inconvenient times.—Per Hardwicke, C. J. (Res v. Poole, Cas. temp. Hardwicke, 27; Corporation of Lameston, 1 Roll. Abr. 533; 4, pl. 5).

DISEASED AND HEALTHY LIVES ASSURED. MEDICAL, INVALID, and GENERAL LIFE OFFICE, 25, Pall Mall, London, and 22, Nassau Street, Dublin.
Subscribed Capital, £500,000.

THIS Office was established in 1841, and possesses Tables formed on a scientific Basis for the Assurance of Diseased Lives.

The urgent necessity for such an Institution may be estimated by the fact, that two-thirds of the Population are not assurable as Healthy Lives, and that about one in five of the Applicants to other Offices is declined on Examination.

And that, during the period of five years, as shewn at the Annual General Meeting of the Proprietors in November last, upwards of 2000 proposals had been made to the Society, covering Assurances to above One Million.

It is the only Company possessing tabulated Rates of Premium for Diseases deduced from extensive data.

HEALTHY LIVES, both at Home and in Foreign Climates, are Assured with as much facility and at lower Rates than at most other Offices; and a capital of HALF-A-MILLION sterling, fully subscribed, affords a complete guarantee for the fulfilment of the Company's engagements.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 6, 1847.

It is singular, that, amongst the efforts of modern legislation for facilitating the conveyance of land, and otherwise for increasing its transferable properties, none should have been made, in the way of removing from titles the difficulties so continually felt, arising from the rule, that the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run against a remainderman whose estate is expectant on the termination of a preceding life estate, until the termination of such life estate,—a rule which completely neutralises, in a great many instances, and in almost all, materially interferes with, the beneficent intention of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71.

It was for some time, as our readers are aware, a contest among the learned, whether the length of title which a purchaser may require since the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, is forty or sixty years; Sir E. Sugden contending, that the statute reduced the term of a marketable title to forty years, as that is the period when, under the statute, an adverse possession will confer an indefeasible title, (2 Sugd. Vend. 132, 10th ed.); and two other eminent conveyancers, Mr. Brodie and Mr. Hayes, contending, that the old period of sixty years would still be the length of title a purchaser would be entitled to require. The question, as is well known, was set at rest by Lord Lyndhurst, in Cooper v. Emery, (1 Phil. 388), and, as we think, upon rational grounds, so far as rational grounds can be assigned for any such rule.

The principle, or at least one principle, of the rule requiring a title of sixty years, is, that, having regard to the supposed chances of the duration of human life, it is supposed that sixty years are likely to cover the probable duration of a life estate, and of the time during which the remainderman, after the accrual of his right, is allowed to remain inert, without injury to his power of asserting such right. It is manifest, however, that the result of acting upon any such rule is, after all, to give but a sort of chance to a purchaser; a probability of safety, depending upon the average duration of human life, and not anything approaching a certainty. And though it may be true, that, in general, a sixty years' title does sufficiently in practice protect the purchaser in his enjoyment, it must be clear that the absence of certainty that it will do so, must affect the general marketability of titles, and, consequently, if one may use the expression, the negotiability of land, as well as its value.

It is beyond question, also, that the necessity of calling for a sixty years' title in every case, must materially increase the expense of investigating titles, and, in a great many cases, of the deeds of conveyance; and hence it operates in fact as a land-tax of no small magnitude. At this day, when property is becoming more and more divided, and when, whether it be more divided or not, men of all grades are, by the attraction of commercial investments, becoming continually more and more anxious to be able cheaply and quickly to conduct the buying and selling of land, it would certainly be desirable that this difficulty attending titles should be removed; and it is not easy to see any good reason why a compulsory bar of some sort should not be set up against the claims of a remainderman, irrespectively to some extent of the duration of the life estate on which his remainder depends, as well as against his claim, irrespectively of his disability by infancy or absence. In fact, it would be less harsh and unjust,—if, indeed, there can be such a thing as injustice in laws purely conventional,—to make the bar of a man's estate independent of the duration of the life of a person who is a stranger to him, and dependent upon acts of his own, than to make it independent of an incapacity over which he has scarcely any, or perhaps no control. The moral perception is somewhat stretched at finding that one man has a given number of years during which his right to an estate is endowed with actual vitality, however much he himself may neglect it, while another, because he happens during half of the period to be under legal incapacity, has but the remaining half of actual vitality for his right. But there would be nothing shocking to the moral perception, in requiring of an adult remainderman, to maintain his right from time to time, during the life of a preceding tenant for life, by acts of his own, manifesting to the public the existence of such a right.

In this view, the exploded doctrine of continual claim, might, perhaps, in a more modern form, and under regulations suited to modern habits, be revived with advantage. A person being adult and sui juris, is bound to be aware of his right to an estate in remainder. In only a few cases is it probable that he will be de facto unaware of it; and it would, we conceive, by no means be a harsh rule to say, that he must be held to know of the existence of his right, whether he does so in fact or not. Wherever he does actually know of its existence, there could not be even the shadow of a hardship in requiring of him from time to time to do some acts of public notoriety making known his claim. For, supposing that the doing of such acts entails upon him some trouble, or inconvenience, or expense, a man can hardly complain that he is called upon to take some pains to preserve that, which he thinks sufficiently valuable to covet its enjoyment. The only difficulty is with reference to those cases where a remainderman is actually not cognizant of his rights during the existence of the prior life estate. Such instances, as we have observed, are necessarily rare; but when they do occur, there seems some hardship in barring the right of a man, because he has not done acts to preserve a title, of his claims to which he had no knowledge. This hardship is, however, one that is to be found at the very root of every statute of limitations; and the principle on which it is permitted, namely, that it is better that now and then one should be deprived of a right, of the existence of which he was ignorant, than that titles should never be questioned, needs at this day neither explanation nor comment.

What we suggest, then, is, that the principle of the limitation of suits should be applied, at any rate, to the case of remainders expectant upon prior life estates; and that some fixed term should be a peremptory bar, where there has been uninterrupted adverse possession, unless the remainderman has made, during the existence of the prior estate, from time to time, some demonstration of right, of a nature to be capable of being easily ascertained by a purchaser. He might, for instance, be required from time to time, during the existence of the life estate, to register his claim as remainderman in some public registry, which a purchaser should be bound to search; so that a purchaser should not, when he has purchased under a forty, or fifty, or sixty years' title, as the case may be, be turned round, and put out of possession, by finding that some extraordinary instance of longevity had caused a right, long unknown or forgotten, to spring up into existence just in time to defeat him. This, or some other expedient easy to be devised, if the principle were once adopted, would, we are satisfied, be found to work with advantage in facilitating the transfer of landed property; and by it, no prejudice could be shocked, and but few cases of any real hardship would be produced.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

And if, in any city, borough, or town corporate in England, Wales, and Berwick-upon-Tweed, no election shall be made of the mayor, bailiff, or other chief officer upon the day or within the time appointed by charter or usage for that purpose, and no election of such officer shall be made pursuant to the directions hereinbefore prescribed, or, such election being made, shall afterwards become void as aforesaid; in every such case, his Majesty's Court of King's Bench may, upon motion, award a writ of mandamus, requiring the members or persons entitled to vote at or to do any act necessary to be done in order to such election respectively, to assemble themselves at such a time prefixed in the writ, and to proceed to the election of a mayor, bailiff, or other chief officer, as the case shall require, and to do every act necessary to be done in order to such election, or to signify to the court good cause to the contrary, and thereupon to cause such proceedings to be had as in any other cases of mandamus for election of officers of corporations; and of the time appointed by such writ of mandamus for holding such assembly, public notice in writing shall, by such person as the court shall appoint, be affixed in the market-place, or some other public place within such city, borough, or town corporate six days before the day so appointed; and such officer or other person respectively shall preside in such assembly as ought to have presided in case the same had been made upon the day hereinbefore prescribed for that purpose. (Sect. 2).

In boroughs and towns corporate in England and Wales, and Berwick-upon-Tweed, where the mayor, bailiff, or other chief officer is to be nominated or sworn at a court leet or view of frankpledge, or some other court, and by reason of the contrivance or default of the lord or his steward, or such other officer by or before whom such court ought to be held, in not holding the same, or by some accident no due nomination, election, or swearing hath been had, the Court of King's Bench, upon motion, may award a mandamus, requiring the lord or his steward, or other officer, to hold such court leet, or other court, and to do every other act necessary in order to such nomination, election, or swearing at such time as shall be for that purpose judged proper by the court. (Sect. 3).

The mayor, bailiff, or other chief officer elected in pursuance of the act, are to take the oaths required upon admission, before the officer presiding at such election, who is authorised to administer them. (Sect. 4).

It was held necessary, where the election was under this statute, that the officer elected should be sworn in before the "presiding officer;" and where the bailiff elected was the "nearest then present in place and office to the bailiffs of the borough," and he alleged taking the oath "before A., B., and C., three other senior aldermen," &c., the election was held void. (Re v. Malden, 4 Burr. 2122; Re v. Phillips, 1 Burr. 292; but see 7 Will. 4 & 1 Viet. c. 78, s. 1). But the election would not be valid, unless as great a number of persons were present at and concurred in the election as in case the same had taken place on the day appointed by the charter or usage of the city, &c. (Sect. 5).

Mayors, &c. voluntarily absenting themselves from, or knowingly and designedly preventing the election of any other mayor, &c. upon the charter-day, &c., shall, upon conviction, suffer six months' imprisonment, and be for ever disabled from taking any office. (Sect. 6).

Lastly, the person to whom the writ of mandamus is directed, is to make return to the first writ. (Sect. 8).

By a recent statute, (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), the municipal corporations throughout England and Wales have undergone a revision, whereby they are much increased, extended, and remodelled; the corporate body must now be elected by burgesses of full age, who, on the last day of August in any year, have occupied houses, &c. rated for three years to the relief of the poor, and resident within seven miles of the borough. Sect. 1 enacts, that all laws, statutes, usages, charters, grants, and letters-patent in force relating to the several boroughs mentioned in the Schedules A. and B. as are inconsistent to the provisions of the act, shall be repealed.

By sect. 15, on the 5th September in every year, the owners of the poor of every parish are to make out a list, to be called "The Burgess List," according to the form in the schedule, of persons entitled to be enrolled in the burgess-roll of the year; and the same shall be delivered to the town-clerk to be perused by any person, without payment of fee, at reasonable times, printed copies of which may be had on payment of a reasonable sum.

By sect. 25 it is enacted, that in every borough shall be elected a mayor, aldermen, and councillors, who shall constitute the council of the borough. On the 9th November in every third succeeding year from the passing of the act, (1835), the council for the time being of every borough shall elect from the councillors, or persons qualified to be councillors, the aldermen of the borough, or so many as shall be needed to supply the places of those who shall go out of office; and, upon the 9th November, 1836, and every three succeeding years, one half of the number appointed shall go out of office.

By sect. 27, whenever a vacancy shall take place in the office of aldermen, the council of the borough shall, within ten days, on a day to be fixed by the mayor, elect some person to fill such vacancy, either from the councillors or persons qualified to be such.

By sect. 36, if the mayor of any borough shall, at the time when it is necessary to execute the duties with respect to elections, be dead, absent, or incapable of acting, the council of the borough shall elect one of the aldermen to execute such duties in the place of the mayor.

By sect. 49 it is enacted, that, on the 9th November in every year, the council of the borough shall elect, out of the aldermen or councillors of the borough, a fit person to be mayor of such borough, who shall continue in office for one whole year; and, in case a vacancy shall be occasioned by reason of the person elected not accepting the same, or of his death, the council shall, within ten days after such vacancy, elect another fit person to be the mayor for the remainder of the current year.

By sect. 50, no person elected a mayor, alderman, or councillor, &c., shall be capable of acting as such, until he shall have made and subscribed a declaration of acceptance of office.

By an act of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 105, for the better administration of justice in certain boroughs, reciting the last-mentioned act of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, it is enacted, that the mayor of every borough shall continue in his office for one whole year, and until his successor shall have accepted the office of mayor, and shall have made and subscribed the declaration required by that act. (Sect. 4).

The Municipal Corporation Act has undergone another amendment by the stat. 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, by sect. 1. of which it is enacted, that no election of any person into a corporate office, to take place after the passing of the act, shall be questioned, by reason of any defect in the title of the person before whom the election may have been had, provided the person before whom the election shall have been had be in actual possession, or acting in the office giving the right to preside at such election. And by sect. 24, any person whose claim shall have been rejected or name expunged at the revision of the burgess-roll, may apply, before the end of the term next following, to the Court of King's Bench for a mandamus to the mayor of the borough to insert his name upon the burgess-roll, upon which the Court may inquire into the title of the applicant to be so enrolled; and, if the Court shall award the mandamus, the mayor shall insert the name upon the burgess-roll, and shall add, "by order of the Court of King's Bench," and subscribe his name; the person whose name shall be so added to be deemed a Burgess, and entitled to vote and act as a Burgess in all respects. And by sect. 25, in case no election be made of the mayor, &c. upon the day appointed by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, or by this act, or, such election being made, shall afterwards become void, whether through default of the officer who ought to preside at such election, or other means whatsoever, the corporation shall not be dissolved, or disabled from electing such mayor, &c.; but the election for such mayor, &c. may be had upon the day next after the day on which such election ought to have been made. Every act necessary for completing such election shall be as valid as if the election had been made on the proper day. And by sect. 26, all powers and authorities given by the stat. 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, to the Court of King's Bench are extended to all cases in which no election shall be made of any mayor, &c. on the day appointed for such election, under the provisions of the act of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, or of this act; and the Court of King's Bench is empowered to award a mandamus, and do all other matters and things in respect thereof, as fully and effectually as the Court is now by law authorised, in cases of mandamus for the election of officers of corporations; and the election under such mandamus shall be conducted under the like regulations as are contained in the said act of 11 Geo. 1, c. 4.

Thus, it appears from the enactments of the foregoing statutes, that a material alteration has been effected in the common law with regard to the remedy by writ of mandamus, in enforcing corporate rights, the provisions of which have had considerable influence in checking the abuses arising from the limited jurisdiction which the Court formerly possessed in granting the writ. Now, should no election of the mayor or other chief officer take place upon the charter-day, the corporation will not, (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 25), as we have already seen it would at common law, become dissolved (4 Burr. 2009); but the members of the corporation may meet on the day after, and proceed to the election; and if no election take place on the charter-day, nor in pursuance of the statute, (11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 1), or, being made, should afterwards become void, the Court of Queen's Bench will grant a mandamus requiring an election to be made.

This being a remedial law for the subject, the Court will give a liberal construction to the words of the act. (Res v. Poole, Cas. temp. Hardw. 27). "This," says Lord Hardwicke, in Res v. Poole, "is a remedial law to prevent inconveniences arising from new elections of annual officers on the charter-day, if the words of the act 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, are large and general enough to comprehend the continuing of elections begun on the charter-day, but not completed within that time. As the mischief is the same, the Court ought to give a liberal construction to them. Therefore the Court, under this statute, will grant a mandamus to compel the members of a corporation to proceed to the election of a mayor, although there had been no regular election for several years preceding. (Rez v. Burgesses of Oxford, M., 9 Geo. 2; Bull. N. P. 201 a, 7th ed.). So, where there was a mayor de facto at the time, it appearing that there had been no due election, a mere de facto election is not sufficient to prevent the Court from issuing a mandamus. The meaning of the statute is, "where no due legal valid election has been made upon the charter or usage-day," the writ may issue; a mere colourable election being void, and no election at all. (Rez v. Mayor of Cambridge, 4 Burr. 2011). But if it appears at all doubtful whether the prior election be not legal, the Court will not grant a mandamus till its validity has been tried in a proper manner. (Rez v. Borough of Tintagel, 9 Geo. 2; 2 Bull. N. P. 201; S. C., 2 Stra. 1003).

It appears the statute is not confined to the election of annual officers; for where, by the charter of a borough, it was directed, that, when any burgess should die or be removed from his office, it should be lawful for the mayor and burgesses, within eight days next following the death or removal, to meet and nominate an inhabitant of the borough to be a burgess during life;—A vacancy having occurred, and more than eight days elapsed without filling up the same, it was holden by the Court, upon consideration of the statute, that, although the burgesses were appointed for life, yet it was not alone confined to annual officers, and that they were authorised to grant a mandamus. (Rez v. Mayor of Thatford, 8 East, 270; Case of the Corporation of Scarborough, 2 Stra. 1180; Hicks v. The Town of Launceston, 1 Roll. Abr. 513, 514). It was held by two judges, that if the king create a corporation, consisting of a mayor and eight aldermen, with a clause, that, upon the death or amotion of an alderman, it shall be lawful for the mayor and the other aldermen, within eight days after such death or amotion, to elect another alderman in the place of the other &c. Although there be no election within the eight days after the death, &c., yet they may elect an alderman at any time afterwards by the power incident to them as a corporation: and this affirmative power to elect within eight days does not toll their incidental power. The writ was granted accordingly. (Edw. 8, c. 1, B. R.).

All other officers who are necessary constituent parts of the corporation, are equally within the meaning of the statute; therefore, the Court will grant a mandamus for their election as well as that of the head officer. (Corporation of Scarborough, 2 Stra. 1180).

The words "no elections," in the 1st section of the statute, (11 Geo. 1, c. 4), are to be taken as signifying "no legal election," and although there may have been an election de facto, the Court will exercise its discretionary power, upon consideration of the particular circumstances, whether or not they will award a mandamus, as the justice of the case may require. (Rez v. Newsham, Say. 211). If the fact of the legality be doubtful, and fit to be tried upon an information in the nature of a quo warranto, the Court will not grant a mandamus. (Rez v. Bankes, 3 Burr. 1462; Rez v. The Mayor of Colchester, 2 T. R. 252). But if, on the other hand, it clearly appears that the election was illegal or merely colourable, the Court will grant the writ. (Rez v. The Mayor of Bossiney, alias Tintagel, H., 8 Geo. 2; Stra. 1008; Bull. N. P. 201, cited in Rez v. Bankes, 3 Burr. 1464; Case of Aberystwith, T., 14 Geo. 2; Stra. 1157; Corporation of Scarborough, H., 16 Geo. 2; Stra. 1180; Rez v. Newsham, (Borough of Carmarthen), E., 28 Geo. 2; Say. 211; Rez v. The Mayor of Cambridge, H., 7 Geo. 3; 4 Burr. 2006). As in the case where the person elected mayor was an officer in the army, who had just left the country for America with his regiment, and likely to continue there for some years: Lord Mansfield there said, "The corporation has a right to a new annual officer every year; and he ought to be duly chosen. The Court are to judge whether such an officer be duly chosen or not. If an officer is actually sworn in, they may, perhaps, think it proper that his right should be tried first, or if the election be doubtful or questionable; but if they see clear that there is only a colourable election, it is void; he has no estate in the office, and the Court will not keep the corporation without a head, but will grant a mandamus to go to election." (Rez v. The Mayor of Cambridge, 4 Burr. 2010; and see Rez v. Bankes, ubi sup.; Rez v. Carter, Cowp. 226). The construction of the statute of 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, underwent considerable discussion in Rez v. Nance, (B. R., T. T., 14 & 15 Geo. 2, cited by Aston, J., in Rez v. Malden, 4 Burr. 2132).

If the election were completed after the departure of the presiding officer, who formed an integral part of the elective assembly, it is void. (Rez v. Buller, 8 East, 389; see 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 25). An assembly was regularly convened for the purpose of nominating and electing a new mayor, over which the then mayor presided; he declared that the persons with whom the nomination rested were equally divided, and consequently that no election could be made; and thereupon he directed proclamation to be made for dissolving the assembly: no objection was made to this, nor did any person give notice that they meant to proceed to make an election; but when the mayor was gone away, and a number of the burgesses also departed, considering the assembly as dissolved, the rest proceeded to make an election:—it was holden that this election was void; for, assuming it to be clear (though the point has never yet been judicially decided) that an election begun under one presiding officer could be completed under another after the departure of the first, yet this was not a continuation of the business begun before the mayor, but an attempt to continue that which had been concluded. Then, considering the case upon the statute, that if the mayor absent himself the next in place may preside, yet here the mayor did not absent himself, but did preside, and, as presiding officer, determined upon the validity of the votes—that they were equal, and that no election could be had; and then dissolved the assembly, and all this without any objection made at the time; and in consequence of such dissolution of the assembly, unobjected to, as it appeared, many of the freemen went away, and then the rest of them made the election in question. This was not an election within the aid of the statute, which never meant to protect elections made by surprise and fraud. (Rez v. Gaborian, 11 East, 77).

The Court will grant a mandamus to compel the admission or restoration of the party applying, to any office or franchise of a public nature, whether spiritual or temporal,—to academical degrees,—to the use of a meeting-house, &c.,—for the production, inspection, or delivery of public books and papers,—for the surrender of the regalia of a corporation,—to oblige bodies corporate to affix their common seal,—to compel the holding of a court,—and for an infinite number of other purposes, which will be more particularly noticed hereafter. But at present we are more particularly to remark, that it issues to the judges of inferior courts, commanding them to do justice according to the powers of their office, whenever the same is delayed; for it is the peculiar business of the Court of Queen's Bench to superintend all inferior tribunals, and therein to enforce the due exercise of those judicial or ministerial powers with which the Crown or Legislature have invested them; and this not only by restraining their excesses, but also by quickening their negligence and obviating their denial of justice. A mandamus may therefore be had to the courts of the city of London to enter up judgment; to the spiritual courts to grant ad-

LONDON, FEBRUARY 13, 1847.

It has been the taste of the public press, for some time, to seize every opportunity of attacking the Bar, and making it responsible, not only for its own errors, of which, in common with every other class of men, it has doubtless enough, but for the errors and faults of its own clients, and its clients' clients. The offence most recently and most vehemently charged upon the Bar, is, accepting briefs with the fees thereon, and not attending upon such briefs; and this, which we at once admit, does, with eminent counsel, both within and behind the Bar, frequently occur, is designated by the polite terms of "swindling," "dishonest," &c. These are the terms that are applied, by way of comparison at least, by a public writer, who, we are satisfied, could only have done so under a misapprehension of the real bearings of the case.

If a barrister accepted a brief upon an express or implied contract or undertaking, that he should with positive certainty attend the court upon that brief, there would be no injustice in designating his conduct as dishonorable, if he departed from his contract. But what is the fact? Is it true that any barrister accepts a brief upon such implied undertaking; or that, in general, he is asked to accept it upon an express undertaking? The members of the junior branch of the Profession know perfectly well, and we believe the public also know, though they wilfully shut their eyes to the fact, that there never is any such implied contract, and very rarely any express one. The reason that there never is any such implied undertaking is, that it would be totally inconsistent with the nature of a barrister's business; and the reason that there is rarely an express one is, that in the only case in which it could be of advantage, viz. in that of a barrister in full practice, no such barrister would, except under very particular circumstances, accept a brief upon such terms*.

If causes came on to be heard strictly and invariably in the order in which they are set down; if all causes took the same time, or, what would come to the same thing, if every cause had, in its turn, a certain time, and only a certain time, allotted to it; and if arrangements were made between the several Courts, so that there should thus be a constant succession of causes, but never the chance of two causes going on concurrently in Westminster Hall; if, in fine, business were done as it never has been, and certainly, at this day, is not done, so that a barrister could know exactly that at ten he should be heard in cause A, and at twelve in cause B, and so on; then it might be practicable for a barrister in full business, never to be in the position of having taken two briefs, and being prevented by the physical impossibility of self-division from attending to one of them. But, as the business of the Courts is managed, with causes taken in and out of the paper, or called on in or out of their order in the paper, and that not for the convenience of the Court, and still less of the Bar, but for the convenience of suitors, no counsel can know, of his own knowledge, or form even a guess, nor can his client inform him, whether, when he accepts a brief, the matter will be disposed of the next day or the next month. Unless, therefore, he were, whenever a brief in any one cause is delivered, to refuse all others until that cause is heard, it would be impossible for him to guard against the possibility of his being required at one and the same time in two places.

* There have been a few instances in which counsel have been retained in a particular cause, with an express arrangement that they should give up all others for it; and we never heard that, in any such instances, counsel have broken their engagements. We believe something of this sort occurred in the important case of Small and Afford.

It is, therefore, the distribution and arrangement of business, over which the barrister has not the slightest control, that produce the possibility of a barrister, who accepts briefs as they are delivered, being sometimes compelled to omit attending upon some of them. We think we have shewn, that, to destroy this possibility is impracticable, except, as we observed, by counsel never receiving but one brief in his chambers at a time. To explain seriously why such a practice would be out of the question, almost passes our powers of gravity. But the matter may be stated thus shortly: that, of course, if the practice were good for anything, it should be general; and, as no one counsel could, on an average, hold more than one brief in a month, one result would be, that, in a few years, there could be no such thing as an experienced counsel, if a Bar existed at all; but the still more probable result would be, that no men of education would be found willing to practise.

But then it is said, when the client pays his fee, he intends to have the services of his counsel, and pays for them, and expects to have them. This is the false assumption on which the whole argument against the Bar is based. The client does no such thing. He, or at least his attorney for him, who ought to inform him if he does not, knows full well, that, when he retains a barrister in full practice, he does so, subject to the possibility, the existence of which we have shewn to result from arrangements beyond the barrister's control. He knows that numbers besides himself are seeking for the assistance of the particular individual whom he retains. He retains him expressly because he is eminent,—because he is much sought,—because, from the general estimation in which he is held, it is inferred, and in most cases correctly inferred, that his reputation is justified by his talents. The suitor, or his attorney, knows full well, that Mr. A. or Mr. B. is retained in so many causes, that, if all or any two or more of them happen to come on together, Mr. A. or Mr. B. must be lost to somebody. But he hopes that unfortunate somebody will not be himself; he speculates upon that chance, and he knows perfectly, when he does retain the favourite counsel, that he is purchasing a chance. The fact is, that an attorney, when he delivers a brief, never asks whether the counsel will undertake to be certain to attend; and he does not ask, because he knows that counsel never can nor will undertake any such thing, and would refuse the brief rather than do so.

We have said more than once in this Journal, and we say it again, the cure of the evil complained of, if it be an evil, is in the hands of the public and of those who represent them, standing between them and the Bar. If those who, in point of form, retain, or those who in the end pay for retaining barristers, do not like to purchase the chance of an eminent man's services, nothing prevents them from obtaining, with a close approximation to certainty, the services of persons not so eminent as to be torn in pieces by a crowd of eager clients. The public may have mediocrity with certainty, or pre-eminence with uncertainty. They usually prefer the latter, and perhaps in general wisely; but when they have made their choice, let them not cast censure upon the Bar, because they do not have that certainty for which they never bargained,—that certainly which was never in the slightest degree guaranteed to them,—that certainty, which, if they asked it at the hands of a barrister in full practice, would unquestionably be refused.

On the 4th February the Lords of the Committee of Council advised her Majesty to make an order in council for putting in force the Small Debts Act, on the 15th March next, in every county throughout England and Wales; and by the same order to fix the towns in each county in which the courts are to be held, and the districts and parishes over which the jurisdiction of each court is to extend, and to give notice pursuant to the act of her Majesty's intention to take into consideration the propriety of making the said orders; and her Majesty was thereupon pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order, and it was thereby ordered, that notice be, and the same was, thereby given, that, after the expiration of one calendar month from the date of the publication of that order, and notice in The London Gazette, her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, would take into consideration the propriety of making the said two several orders for the purposes of the said act.

A GENERAL REGISTER OF TITLES.

Two years ago, when we devoted some space in this Journal to the advocacy of the principle of registration, (ante, vol. 9, p. 207), we believed we were advocating the unpopular side of the question. Since then, public opinion, or rather, the opinion of the influential class of landowners, has taken a decided turn in favour of a general register, and there can be little doubt, that, at no very distant period, the experiment, which, in the reign of Anne, was tried and signally failed in Middlesex and Yorkshire, will be repeated more advisedly and under better auspices. The Society for promoting the Amendment of the Law has devoted much attention to the subject, and is, we believe, still engaged in investigating some questions of detail. Two reports, which have emanated from one of the committees of that learned body, will be found in the ninth number of the Law Review. The first of those reports is devoted to the same topics which formed the subject of our article of 1845, already alluded to; namely, the general policy of a register of title in the abstract, and the details of the plan proposed by the late Mr. Duval, a plan founded on the existing system of retrospective deduction of title. That report concludes with the following remarks:—"The plan of registration which we have been considering involves no direct interference with the present system of conveyancing beyond the imposition of the ceremony of registration, as an additional requisite to the validity of transfers of real property. But, as Mr. Hayes has shewn, (2nd Real Prop. Rep. Append. p. 446), the probable effect of a perfect register on the proposed plan would be ultimately to establish a universal system of trusts, and to render the legal title wholly unimportant. Another scheme for a register of a directly opposite nature has been proposed; its essential characteristic being to render notice of trusts unimportant in all dealings with estates for the purpose of alienation or incumbrance, and to provide for the production, in every case, of a clear legal title, unincumbered with any trust or any derivative legal title other than that of a mortgagee, judgment creditor, lessee, or the like; so that every vendor or mortgagor, however limited his beneficial interest may be, will, on the face of the transaction, appear to be the absolute owner, subject only to any such simple derivative legal title as may be admitted on the register, in the same manner as, on the Stock Exchange, a trustee appears to be absolutely entitled to the stock which he transfers. See

Mr. R. Wilson's 'Outlines of a Plan for adapting the Machinery of the Public Funds to the Transfer of Real Property.' This plan is now under our consideration, and we propose to make it the subject of a separate report."

We were favoured with a copy of Mr. Wilson's pamphlet some years ago; but, we confess, we were so startled by his bold proposal to do away with all retrospective deduction of title in transactions of sale and mortgage, that we did not think it necessary to occupy our readers' attention with what seemed to be a utopian scheme. We were not blind to the commercial advantages of a system which would provide at all times and for all estates a trustee or trustees invested with absolute dominion and power of alienation, but we saw, or fancied we saw, in such unreserved confidence, more risk and instability than would be endured in this country. Further reflection has convinced us that we were wrong, and we now regard Mr. Wilson's ingenious plan in a light more favourable even than that in which he himself and the committee of the Law Amendment Society have ventured to place it. It is true, that the machinery by which he proposes to work out his principle differs as strikingly from those recondit arrangements which are now managed with so much art in Lincoln's Inn, as Liebig's laboratory does from that of Van Helmont; but the principle is one which was invented by the conveyancers themselves, and has long been applied, as a matter of course, in dealing with the principal estates in the country—applied, that is to say, in an imperfect manner, and so as to secure but a small portion of the advantages offered by Mr. Wilson's plan, and to occasion much more risk than it involves. In short, Mr. Wilson's scheme is nothing more than an improvement and amplification of that contrivance, which is now universally adopted in well-drawn settlements of real estate—the power to sell and give discharges. The policy of this usual clause in settlements is well understood. No one can say that it may not, at some time, be advantageous for all the objects of the settlement, that the estate, or a part of it, should be sold; and as the parties beneficially interested may not then be competent to act for themselves, absolute dominion over the estate is conferred on a body of trustees, and provision is made for supplying vacancies among the members of that body. By these powers the estate and the produce of any sale are placed at the absolute mercy of the trustees, and this is daily done without hesitation in settling the largest estates in the country. Mr. Wilson proposes to do no more—or rather, not to do so much; for his plan provides checks and safeguards, which the present system wants.

The plan is shortly this:—To provide a register for the purposes of alienation only, being the only register to which a purchaser of the fee simple need look; wholly distinct from the register of subordinate or equitable interests, (if it should be deemed expedient to have such a register), just as the title derived from the trustees for sale under a settlement is distinct from, and independent of, the titles of the various persons beneficially interested under the settlement. On this register, at its commencement, the estate will be entered as belonging absolutely to a single owner, or to several joint owners; all reference to subordinate interests, except such simple interests as mortgage leases, &c., being excluded. On the death of one of several owners, the title will (for the purposes of the register) vest in the survivors; on the death of a sole owner, the title (i. e. the power of disposition) will vest in his executor or administrator. The alienation by the registered owner or owners will confer an indefeasible title; and on the instrument of transfer being presented to the registrar, the entry of the title of the alienor will be cancelled, and an entry of the alienee's title will be substituted.

Thus there will at all times be an owner on the register competent to act, and his title will be conclusively manifested by a single entry in the register. By means of apt provisions for caveats, stop-orders, &c., sufficient protection against the abuse of the large disposing power thus entrusted to the parties on the register may be provided.

Thus much by way of introduction to the following detailed explanation of the scheme, taken from the report above alluded to:—

"The necessity of deducing a retrospective title seems to be the one great obstruction which at present impedes the alienation of real property. For whatever increased facilities of transfer may be afforded by the removal of the cumbrous technicalities of attendant terms; or by curtailing the verbiage of legal instruments; or again by recording the elements of the abstract of title—it is in their tendency to simplify the long detail of retrospective history that such reforms must be principally beneficial. The mere instrument of transfer might be left to simplify itself if the title were made simple. Now, is retrospective deduction of title a necessary evil or not?

"There are several general considerations which point towards a negative answer to this important inquiry. For instance, it seems absurd to require more evidence in an amicable transfer than in a hostile litigation. The mere possession of the ostensible owner is a title against all the world till affirmatively impeached on specific grounds, but the most willing purchaser pleads the general issue to his vendor's title, and puts him upon the proof of the whole of it.

"Again, it seems a waste of labour to require the same thing to be done several times over. An estate is sold, the purchaser first inquiring into its adventures for the previous sixty years. Presently it is resold, and the same tedious narrative of undisputed facts is subjected to the critical acuteness of a second conveyancing counsel. However, the second purchaser is satisfied, we will suppose, and wishes to raise money on mortgage. The mortgagee goes into the inquiry again. Every fact, though undisputed, must be affirmatively proved; and the proof must be repeated every time the estate is dealt with.

"If this were some remnant of ancient forms, inconvenient at the moment, but gradually wearing itself out, it might be tolerated; but, on the contrary, our system of titles seems to progress only in complication. The more frequently real property is dealt with, the more laborious it becomes to deal with it. Every transaction which is occasioned by increased commercial activity, or promoted by judicious amendments of the law, adds a new chapter to the future abstract of title; and it is usually found that the last twenty years of a modern title fill as many sheets of the abstract as the first forty years.

"The committee have thought it right to mention some of the antecedent considerations which have led them to entertain so great an innovation as the abolition of retrospective deduction of title. If a further reason for this were wanted, they would dwell on the effect of retrospective titles on the transfer of small properties. It has been justly observed by a recent writer, that 'the time is fast approaching when the expense of any dealing with real property will be so great as utterly to preclude the poorer classes from the acquisition of land.' Practically speaking, small properties cannot be dealt with, except as articles of luxury—the large proprietor is debarred from selling, and the poor man from buying, by the expense of the transfer. Retrospective titles, then, are not merely a legal inconvenience, but a great social evil.

"The next point to be considered is, how are these titles to be got rid of? They have been dispensed with in Prussia and other parts of Germany, but only by means of a degree of government interference, which would scarcely be tolerated in England, nor would, indeed, be easily applicable to the complicated limitations of English settlements. But we have a class of non-retrospective titles within our own observation and experience in the instance of personal property; and more particularly of that description of personal property, which has been already referred to, namely, stock in the public funds.

"This large mass of property is held under titles deduced through a regular series of recorded instruments of transfer. Moreover, it is very frequently the subject of settlements and other special dispositions: and yet it is transferred without any retrospective inquiries whatever. Now the cause of this remarkable facility of transfer seems to be that the legal ownership of funded property, instead of being cut up into fractional portions, or 'estates,' when effect is to be given to derivative interests, is always vested in some recognised person or persons as an entire thing, however much ordinary or presumptive right of the legal owner to the enjoyment of the property vested in him, may in some cases be controlled or modified by trusts or personal duties contracted by him for the benefit of others.

"Thus, the distinction between the title to land and the title of stock seems to arise from a difference in the modes adopted in the two cases for giving effect to derivative interests common to both. And if this be so, it is at least deserving of the most mature consideration, whether, as retrospective titles have been dispensed with in the one case, they might not be got rid of in the other.

"The most prominent feature in the title to stock is, as has been mentioned, the registration of the ownership as an entire thing in the name of the actual proprietor, and the transmission of the registered ownership, in its entirety, from hand to hand. Now, in proceeding to apply this principle to real property, it is obvious to remark, that it might admit of some considerable development. The ownership of the land might be registered subject to a derivative interest, such as a mortgage, a lease, or the like; and the derivative interest itself might form the subject of a subordinate registered ownership. An estate might stand in the name of A. as owner, subject to a mortgage standing in the name of B., to a lease in the name of C., and even to a settlement in the name of D. And the estate, the mortgage, the lease, and the settlement would be transferable like funded property, because all would stand registered, in like manner, in the names of their respective owners.

"Moreover, it would seem that this kind of registered ownership might, if it were thought desirable, extend to every derivative interest belonging to a person in being. But interests limited in favour of unborn descendants would have to be registered in the names of trustees. And here the committee arrive at a point which they are anxious to consider at the outset, namely, the bearing of such a trusteeship on the security of contingent interests.

"Efficient precautions against forgery being for the present assumed, contingent interests could not, at any rate, be placed in a greater peril than that to which a large class of them were subject under the common trust to preserve contingent remainders. And if it be said that this latter risk is now removed, it may be answered that the power of selling and exchanging, which is still a common form in every settlement, involves a risk of exactly the same kind. If such a power is only to be exercised with the consent of some person in being, a similar restriction may be provided by the plan of registration which the committee are about to consider; and if without consent, then the estate is already placed in the power of trustees.

"It may be concluded, then, that contingent interests would not be placed in any new peril by their proposed dependence on trustees. And when it is considered how large a mass of funded property is held under trusts, and how well (speaking generally) such trusts are administered, it is not unreasonable to assume, that the occasional and cautious interposition of similar machinery, as applied to a description of property which can seldom be made the subject of a fraudulent sale without immediate detection, would not form an objection to a comprehensive plan for extricating land from the labyrinth of complication, in which its titles are in a manner lost: even though it were thought probable that a trusteeship would be voluntarily resorted to in many cases, as a convenient method of giving effect to derivative interests in favour of persons in being.

"For it must not be supposed that derivative interests belonging to persons in being would necessarily be registered in the names of their proprietors, immediately against the ownership of the property affected by them. On the contrary, the scheme under consideration provides ample machinery for the registration and protection of trust estates.

"There would in fact be two registers, the one comprising what may be called the legal estate, namely, the ownership of the land and that of each derivative interest registered in its proprietor's name as above mentioned; and the other being a subordinate and dependent register of equitable interests or trusts.

"And the practical difference between the two classes of registered interests would be, that the registered proprietor of every legal interest would be a necessary party to an unincumbered transfer of the land, so that a transfer, if made without his concurrence, would be subject to his interest; whereas the registration of an equitable interest would only suspend the completion, or rather the complete effect of a transfer, not concurred in by its proprietor, until after the expiration of a notice transmitted by the registrar to be registered equitable proprietor; that is to say, the legal proprietor would have to concur actively, the equitable proprietor passively, if it were intended to discharge his interest. The legal register would, as has been mentioned, be an adaptation and development of the present register of funded property; the equitable register would be an application and extension of the protection afforded to the owners of equitable interests in such property by the writ of distringas.

"Having disposed of the question of security, the committee will now proceed to a more particular description of the plan of registration, which has been brought before them for abolishing retrospective deduction of title: premising that although described for the sake of greater clearness as a comprehensive machinery extending over the whole of England and Wales, the plan in question might, in the first instance, be tried on a small scale and at a trifling cost in any district possessing a tithe commutation map of the first class, and afterwards be extended by degrees to the rest of the country.

"Let it be supposed, however, that we have a national map on the scale of a tithe commutation of the first class, divided into parishes, and engraved for sale in small compartments.

"Let each material unit of real property (such as a field or a house) situate within a given parish be distinguished by a number on the appropriate division of the national map.

"Let each parish have its register of the properties contained in it, founded on the map, and provided with two blank columns, one for the value of each unit of property, and the other for the date of the first registration of the ownership of it, as presently mentioned.

"Let the properties in the parish be separately valued at periodical intervals of time for all purposes of general and local taxation, and let their values be entered in the appropriate column of the register of properties.

"When the legal ownership of the properties in the parish has been ascertained in the manner presently proposed, let the date of the first registration of such ownership be inserted in the remaining column of the register of properties, and then let the whole of the statistical information collected as above mentioned be printed.

"The register office would be a central one, situate in London. A parish would be placed under this office, on its own application, signified by a resolution at a vestry meeting.

"One of the parochial officers would thenceforth be constituted the local agent or servant of the central office. His duties as local registrar would be extremely simple, as will appear in the sequel.

"A commissioner from London would hold a meeting on the spot, as if he were about to enclose a common. He would have before him at the meeting the engraved map of the locality, and the statistics of the properties delineated upon it. He would call for and receive statements, in writing, of the names and addresses of persons claiming to be registered as the legal owners of the respective properties. In very many cases these claims would be undisputed. In many other cases the parties interested would readily concur in the nomination of one or more of themselves or their friends to the legal ownership. In disputed cases the commissioner would register the name and address of the person in actual possession or receipt of the rents; who, by being thus invested with the legal estate as the representative of all persons concerned, would be restored to the position of the ancient freeholder. In some few extreme cases of disputed and very confused titles, the commissioner might be unable to discover who was in possession or receipt of the rents, and then the property would remain registered in the name of a public officer till the parties claiming to be interested in it could settle their differences amicably or judicially.

"By these means the legal estate in the properties contained in the parish would become vested in a body of registered proprietors; and conveyances would thenceforth be effected upon short printed forms like those used for the transfer of funded property.

"The registered title would be subject to the risk of concealed equitable claims for a period long enough to allow ample time for their registration. The committee would propose five years, with a moderate extension in favour of persons under disabilities, limited to an extreme period of twenty years from the date of the first registration of the legal ownership.

"Existing derivative interests, such as mortgages, leases, and the like, would be admitted to the legal register on the application of the person claiming to represent them, at the peril of an action for slander of title, if registered without reasonable and probable cause. And a derivative interest so registered would be transferable like the registered legal ownership of the land itself.

"The proposed system of registration might thus be started without any investigation of existing titles. After the lapse of a few years, every unregistered interest would be invalidated, and the whole title would appear upon the register; and the machinery would then work as follows:—

"The registered landowner would be the holder of a certificate or certificates expressive of his ownership. The certificate would, in fact, be an office copy of a page in each of two duplicate-books kept at the central and local register offices, and the issued certificate would be distinguished by the number of the page of the recorded certificates. And as the certificate would be surrendered and replaced by a new one, on the occasion of each dealing with the property, (as explained in the sequel), its distinguishing number would be subject to continual change; and forgery would thus be prevented by a precaution similar to that which prevents (speaking generally) the forgery of transfers of funded property, namely, by the concealment from an intending forger of the number of the certificate in the one case, as of the amount of the stock in the other.

"Joint owners would hold duplicate copies of the issued certificate, but would be guarded against the forgery of each other by private marks or numbers upon their respective copies.

"Any information contained in the register would be furnished at a moderate fee to any applicant, always excepting the number of the current certificate, which would be kept secret, inquiries being made by reference to the numbers of the properties on the published map.

"The landowner might have arranged his registered units of property in his certificates, according to his discretion, combining or separating his titles at pleasure; and he might change the arrangement as often as he pleased by surrendering the existing certificates and taking out new ones.

"If a registered unit of property were to be divided, it would be surveyed at its owner's expense; a map shewing the divisions of it would be registered and lithographed; and one of the lithographs would be annexed to each successive certificate issued for any of the divided portions of it.

"An entire parish might be re-surveyed at any time at its own expense, if the properties contained in it had been much changed by building or otherwise.

"A SALE

would be effected by surrendering the current certificate of ownership, with a short transfer indorsed upon it. The surrender might be made by sending the indorsed certificate to the central register office, or depositing it with any local registrar for transmission to London. And new certificates would be issued from the London office in the purchaser's name, and delivered out to him either in London or at any local office, according to his convenience.

"AN EQUITABLE MORTGAGE

would be effected by a mere deposit of the certificate, accompanied by an unregistered memorandum of deposit.

"A LEGAL MORTGAGE

would be effected by surrendering the current certificate of ownership, properly indorsed, and taking out a certificate of mortgage in favour of the mortgagee, and a new certificate of ownership, subject to the mortgage, in favour of the mortgagor. The mortgage would be transferred by indorsing and surrendering the certificate of mortgage, and taking out a new one in the transferee's name; and it would be discharged by indorsing and surrendering the certificate of mortgage, and cancelling the recorded entry of it.

"A LEASE

would be effected by a deed, as at present. It would be deposited at the register office. The landlord's certificate of ownership would be surrendered and replaced by a new certificate of ownership, subject to the lease. The lessee would receive a certificate of lease. The lease might be assigned by indorsing and surrendering the certificate of lease, and taking out a new one in the assignee's name. It might be surrendered by being transmitted to the registrar with a proper indorsement upon it. On the expiration of the term, the recorded certificate of lease would be cancelled.

"A JUDGMENT

would be registered by entering the particulars of it at the creditor's peril against any properties standing in the debtor's name. The judgment creditor would receive a certificate importing the registration of the judgment, and his lien would be discharged by indorsing and surrendering the certificate of judgment.

"We proceed now to the

"EQUITABLE REGISTER.

"Suppose an estate to have been transferred by the means above described into the names of the trustees of a settlement. The trustees would thus have become the holders of duplicate certificates, distinguished from other certificates by a common number, and guarded, as between themselves, by distinct private marks or numbers. It is further desired to give the beneficiaries a direct control over the trustees. For this purpose the recorded and issued certificates of legal ownership would express that the property was under trust, and would contain a reference to a page in the equitable register; and the same notification and reference would be continued in any substituted certificates for the trust property, so long as it remained such.

"The settlement, or a duplicate of it, would be deposited at the register-office, and conveniently bound up in a book.

"The page of the equitable register, referred to as above mentioned by the certificates of legal ownership, would form an index to the roots of equitable titles arising under the registered settlement.

"Any person claiming an equitable interest under the settlement, whether existing at its date or arising afterwards, would be entitled to register his name and address as those of the owner of such equitable interest. He would receive an official certificate of equitable registration, authenticated by a distinguishing number, and entitling the person named in it to a moderate notice previous to the passing of a legal transfer.

"The registered equitable title would be assignable by deeds registered according to Lord Campbell's plan; and, on the occasion of every registration of an assignment, the current certificate of equitable registration would be surrendered, and a new one taken out in favour of the assignee.

"Let it now be supposed, that the trustees, as registered legal owners, propose to transfer the property. Before allowing the transfer, the registrar turns to the appropriate page of the equitable register, where he finds entries of several subsisting equitable titles, each standing registered in the name of its owner, whose address is also entered. Notices are sent accordingly, by post, from the register-office. If the registered equitable proprietors are cognizant of the intended transfer by the trustees, and consenting to it, they fill up and sign a printed form of consent, indorsed on their certificates of equitable registration, and transmit them by post to the registrar. Otherwise the transfer is either delayed for perhaps a month, to afford to the equitable proprietors an opportunity of interfering to prevent it, or else made subject to their registered interests.

"It has been suggested that difficulties might arise in case of the accidental loss of certificates. The committee do not, however, entertain any apprehension on this point, for it is not found in practice that persons lose their certificates of shares or their title-deeds. The proposed certificates would be instruments of some bulk made out on sheets of demy paper, with large official seals upon them. Forms of this kind have been under the attentive consideration of the committee, and will be laid before the society.

"The question of expense has been already sufficiently considered by the committee in their first report. The principal item would be the cost of the original survey and map, which would not exceed 1s. an acre, and might be greatly reduced, if not altogether saved, wherever a tithe communication map of the first class already exists.

"On the whole, the committee, after having bestowed much time and attention upon the plan before them, see no reason to doubt that it might be rendered perfectly efficient for the purposes for which it is designed; and they are of opinion that its adoption would raise the market value of landed property without diminishing its security."

DISEASED AND HEALTHY LIVES ASSURED.

MEDICAL, INVALID, and GENERAL LIFE OFFICE, 25, Pall Mall, London, and 23, Nassau Street, Dublin. Subscribed Capital, £500,000.

THIS Office was established in 1841, and possesses Tables formed on a scientific Basis for the Assurance of Diseased Lives.

The urgent necessity for such an Institution may be estimated by the fact, that two-thirds of the Population are not assurable as Healthy Lives, and that about one in five of the Applicants to other Offices is declined on Examination.

And that, during the period of five years, as shown at the Annual General Meeting of the Proprietors in November last, upwards of 3000 proposals had been made to the Society, covering Assurances to above One Million.

It is the only Company possessing tabulated Rates of Premium for Disease deduced from extensive data.

HEALTHY LIVES, both at Home and in Foreign Climates, are Assured with as much facility and at lower Rates than at most other Offices; and a capital of HALF-A-MILLION sterling, fully subscribed, affords a complete guarantee for the fulfilment of the Company's engagements.

FRANCIS G. P. NEISON, Actuary.

N.B. Applications for Agencies to be made to the Actuary.

DEEDS for EXECUTION ABROAD.—Messrs. J. & R. M'CRACKEN, Foreign Agents, 7, Old Jewry, beg to inform the Legal Profession that they undertake to forward Deeds for Execution by Parties Abroad, through their Correspondents on the Continent, for the Costs of Transmission and a simple Commission.

List of Correspondents, and for further information, apply as above. Messrs. J. & R. M'CRACKEN are also Agents to the ROYAL ACADEMY, and devote their attention to the Receipt of Works of Art, Baggage, &c. sent home by Travellers on the Continent for passing through the Custom-house. They also undertake to ship Goods to all Parts of the World.

METCALFE & CO.'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH, and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth-brush has the important advantages of searching thoroughly into the divisions of the Teeth, and cleaning them in the most effectual and extraordinary manner, and is famous for the hairs not coming loose, &c. An improved Clothes' Brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. Penetrating Hair Brushes, with the durable unbleached Russian bristles, which do not soften like common hair. Flesh Brushes of improved graduated and powerful friction. Velvet Brushes, which act in the most surprising and successful manner. The genuine SMYRNA SPONGE, with its preserved valuable properties of absorption, vitality, and durability, by means of direct importations, dispensing with all intermediate parties' profits and destructive bleaching, and securing the luxury of a genuine Smyrna Sponge. ONLY at METCALFE & CO.'s, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

Caution.—Beware of the words "from Metcalfe & Co.'s," adopted by some houses.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 20, 1847.

THE Court of Exchequer Chamber has recently given judgment in the case of Gossett v. Howard, which, as our readers probably recollect, was an action brought to try the validity of the imprisonment of the plaintiff below, under the warrant of the Speaker of the House of Commons. The case came before the judges on a writ of error from the Court of Queen's Bench, and was argued after the sittings of Trinity and Michaelmas Terms last. The points raised involved important questions touching the privileges of Parliament, but on these the judges abstained from giving, except incidentally, any opinion, as their decision proceeded upon the legality of the warrant.

Before entering into the question of law, it may, perhaps, be as well briefly to refer to the facts of the case as they arose. It appears, that certain matters came on to be discussed in the House of Commons, when it was considered necessary that the plaintiff below should be examined at the bar of the House. An order for his attendance was accordingly made and served, but, in the words of the plea, he "wilfully and contemptuously, without any reasonable cause, refused to attend, and thereupon, and in order to compel his attendance, to be questioned, &c., it was ordered and resolved by the House of Commons, in pursuance of, and according to, its ancient usages and privileges, and the law and custom of Parliament, that he should be sent for and brought before the House in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms, and that the Speaker should issue his warrant accordingly; whereupon the Speaker, in pursuance of the said order and resolution, and according to the ancient usages &c., in order that the plaintiff (below) might be brought before the House, by his warrant in that behalf duly made, after reciting therein that the said House of Commons had that day ordered that the plaintiff should be sent for and brought in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms, did require and authorise him the defendant (below) to take the plaintiff into custody; that such warrant was delivered by the Speaker to the defendant as such Serjeant, to be by him executed in due form of law, by virtue whereof he arrested the plaintiff *." It was for this arrest that the plaintiff brought his action for an alleged trespass and assault committed on him, as the declaration stated, by carrying him along a passage to a room and detaining him there. There were three pleas on the record, but there was no substantial difference in their statements, and each set forth the warrant as above. To these pleas the plaintiff demurred, and after argument on the demurrer, the learned judges of the Court of Queen's Bench were divided in opinion. The late Mr. Justice Williams gave his judgment in favour of the defendant, but Lord Denman, C. J., Coleridge, J., and Wightman, J., decided that the pleas were bad, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover. This judgment proceeded on the grounds, that the warrant was defective, and that the other facts stated in the pleas could not be incorporated into the warrant, so as to cure its defects. The analogous cases, on which the majority of the learned judges chiefly relied on this occasion, were such as had been decided in reference to the warrants of magistrates, and, in accordance with such decisions, they held that the cause of commitment, and a limited time for the imprisonment, should have appeared on the face of the warrant; but Mr. Justice Williams considered that all cases of warrants emanating from inferior jurisdictions were inapplicable to the warrant of the Speaker of the House of Commons. It was said by Coleridge, J., "If, for the House of Commons in this warrant, you substitute any other authority known to the Constitution, it is quite clear that the warrant would be bad. . . . I cannot admit, that the degree of strictness in which formal accuracy is to be required in warrants has been measured, or ought to be, by the dignity of the Courts from which they issue." This judgment has been reversed in error, upon a ground directly opposite to that by which Mr. Justice Coleridge supported his opinion, in the words we have just quoted. Mr. Baron Parke delivered the judgment of the Court above; and the principle on which their decision is founded appears to be simple in itself, and capable of being supported by good sense and authority. It is this: that the warrant was not to be construed with the strictness which is applied to the warrants of magistrates or others acting by special statutory authority, and out of the course of the common law, but that it was to be regarded as the mandate or writ of a superior Court, acting according to the course of the common law. It had been admitted throughout the case, that the House of Commons possessed the power of committing for contempt; it was, therefore, a matter within the scope of their general jurisdiction. The House of Commons is a part of the High Court of Parliament, which is the supreme Court of the country, (per Lord Camden, 19 St. Tr. p. 1047; and see 4 Inst. 13, 27); and, therefore, jurisdiction being shewn, the maxim, "Omnia præsumuntur ritè esse acta," must apply. Had it, however, been a Court of even co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Courts in Westminster Hall, yet the same reasoning would hold good, as it is not competent for one of those Courts to interfere with the practice and course of proceeding of such other court. It is to be intended that such Courts understand the acts, which they sanction by their authority; and as one is not a Court of appeal from another, the proceedings cannot be questioned by one of equal jurisdiction.

Magistrates acting by special statutory powers, out of the course of the common law, must shew their authority on the face of the instruments by which they act, either by direct averment or reasonable intendment. But this rule is not applicable to superior Courts, acting according to the course of the common law. The process which issues from them, not appearing to be beyond the scope of their jurisdiction, is presumed to be correctly issued, and to be correct in form; their officers are bound to execute it, and are protected in the performance of such duty. (See Peacock v. Bell, 1 Wms. Saund. 74).

Thus, although some of their writs—as a writ of execution—recite the cause of their issuing, and shew their legality; yet others do not. A writ of attachment for a contempt does not state the rule of court on which it issues, or the nature of the contempt; that in the Common Pleas orders the officer to bring the party into court "to answer to us of and concerning those things which, in our behalf, shall be then and there objected against him." (Tidd's Forms, 116).

There is in this no statement of any previous proceedings, or of the nature of the offence; and, although it would be undoubtedly bad if issued by a magistrate, yet, coming from a superior Court, the Court of Queen's Bench or Exchequer would not interfere with regard to it, or allow its validity to be questioned. They go further even than this, and protect their officers in the execution of their process, which, on the face of it, is irregular,—as a capias against a peeress,—(The Countess of Rutland's case, 6 Coke, 364); or, which is void in form, as a capias ad respondendum, returnable in the next term. (Parsons v. Loyd, 3 Wils. 341).

In the late case of The Sheriff of Middlesex, (11 Adol. & Ell. 273), the warrant of the Speaker was similar to the one in Gossett v. Howard, except that it concluded with a direction,—“him safely to keep during the pleasure of the House.” It was there held good, although it did not state the grounds for the commitment, and, therefore, would certainly have been bad if issued by a magistrate; and such a direction as was therein contained would appear to be implied in every Speaker's warrant.

In Reg. v. Patey, (2 Ld. Raym. 1105), the Speaker's warrant, returned to a habeas corpus, was similar to the one last mentioned; but the Court refused to discharge the prisoner. It was said in that case, by Gould, J., “If this had been a return of a commitment by an inferior Court, it had been naught, because it did not set out a sufficient cause of commitment; but this return being of a commitment by the House of Commons, which is superior to this Court, it is not reversible for form.” “If all commitments for contempts,” said Powys, J., “even those by this Court, should come to be narrowly scanned, they would not hold water. . . . The House of Commons is a great Court, and all things done by them are to be intended to have been ritè acta, and the matter need not be so specially recited in their warrants; by the same reason as we commit people by a rule of court of two lines, and such commitments are held good, because it is to be intended that we understand what we do. . . . We must take it that what they have done is warranted by their jurisdiction, and is well done.”

So, on a like question, in Brass Crosby's case, (3 Wils. 188), Lord de Grey said, “It would be a sufficient return to state the breach of privilege generally; and Blackstone, J., said, “The House of Commons is a supreme Court. . . . All Courts, by which I mean to include the two Houses of Parliament and the Courts of Westminster Hall, can have no control in matters of contempt. . . . Little nice objections of particular words, and forms and ceremonies of execution, are not to be regarded in the acts of the House of Commons; it is our duty to presume the orders of that House and their execution are according to law.”

In the case of The Earl of Shaftesbury, (6 St. Tr. 1296), the Court refused to release him from a commitment of the House of Lords, although it was formally defective; and it was said by Sir Thomas Jones, “Such a commitment by an ordinary Court of justice would have been ill and uncertain; but the cause is different when it comes before this high Court.” And to a like effect is the case of Rex v. Hobhouse, (2 Chit. 211). The rule is thus laid down by Hawkins, (P. C., v. 2, p. 165, s. 73):—“There can be no doubt but that the highest regard is to be paid to all the proceedings of either of those Houses of Parliament; and that, wherever the contrary does not plainly and expressly appear, it shall be presumed that they act within their jurisdiction, and agreeably to the usages of Parliament and the rules of law and justice."

The Court of error, in their judgment, studiously avoided entering into the more general and interesting question, as to the House of Commons being the sole judge of its own privileges, and the right of a Court of law to inquire into the legality of its proceedings. Stockdale v. Hansard, (9 Adol. & Ell. 1), therefore, is still untouched, and the very occurrence of these cases are practical instances, that the Courts will investigate the process of the House of Commons; at all events, if the House of Commons be willing to submit to such investigation.

We have confined our remarks to the more narrow ground on which this late judgment was placed; and, even in this view, the result is by no means unimportant, as it has settled the principle of construction which is to be applied to parliamentary process by the Courts of justice; and it seems to establish their validity in all cases where it is not apparent that they have acted beyond the scope of their jurisdiction.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 27, 1847.

IN a pamphlet now before us*, and of which we shall say no more in the way of criticism than that, considering the sweeping character of the alterations in the whole judicature of the country that it proposes, it is a great deal too loose and vague in its language and reasoning, we find one of the objections made to the County Courts Act (the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), is, that it leaves it to the discretion of the judge to have an action tried or not by a jury,—a censure upon the County Courts Act which is followed by an eulogy in the genuine Blackstonian vein, of trial by jury, such as—“ Trial by jury has been used in this nation time out of mind; the law of King Ethelred speaks of it, and at that early period not as an invention. And I always imagined that it was the boast of Englishmen, that, though it hath been for a time greatly impaired and shaken by the introduction of the Norman trial by battle, yet it was always so highly esteemed and valued by the people that no conquest nor change of government could ever abolish it.”

Now, we think that one of the very best features about the County Courts Act, as a measure of indirect jurisprudential influence, apart from its direct practical effect, (on which we are not at present going to give any opinion), is, that it does strike the first open and public blow at the trial by jury.

Trial by jury is one of those institutions which are supported principally by force of prestige and habit, and not upon their intrinsic merit. Any argument in favour of any judicial institution, founded upon its mere antiquity, is now of course utterly obsolete and undeserving of notice. Upon the same species of argument finances and recoveries were supported even down to our day. Upon the same argument trial by battle might have been supported, and doubtless would have been, even in the eighteenth century, if the absurdity of the institution had not exceeded even that of the argumentum ab antiquitate. That trial by jury is as old as Ethelred, or that it is (if, indeed, it be) of Saxon original, or that Englishmen have been wont to make it their boast, is no more a reason for preserving it, than the undoubted fact, that to monasteries and monastic institutions the preservation of learning is to be traced, would be a reason for preserving at this day monastic institutions. That a fair degree of weight should be given, in considering the value of a judicial institution, to its antiquity, we do not deny; because its antiquity is prima facie evidence of two things: first, that, attributing to preceding generations an average amount of intelligence, that institution is likely not to be without good, by which many successive generations have thought fit to regulate their comfort and well being; and, secondly, that, whether the institution be well or ill adapted to its proposed objects, it must necessarily strongly affect and influence the habits of the people; and, therefore, that its removal may cause much temporary inconvenience, even though it eventually opens the way to an improved institution. But these are the only fair grounds on which to value business institutions for their antiquity; and it is time that, with regard to the trial by jury, we should do what we have already done with many other things not less sacred, viz. not take it for granted, because Blackstone has said so, that the liberties and property of Englishmen cannot be preserved without it; not bow down before the very name of jury, as if to worship trial by jury were of itself the index of a sound legal mind; still less do as many do, extol it in public, and secretly deride it; but hold, and say without circumlocution, that it is an institution that may have outlived its value, and consider and discuss whether, in fact, it has or has not done so.

It has been the custom with men of all classes to attribute to the trial by jury, many of those benefits which, though co-existent with the trial by jury, have not been obviously the result of it; and the illogical conclusion propter hoc, because post hoc, has nevertheless been drawn. Thus continually it has been and is argued, that the trial by jury is indispensable for eliciting the truth out of a conflict of evidence; and, in support of this argument, is urged the known incapacity of Courts of equity to elicit truth in such cases, and their consequent settled practice of sending them to a jury. Now, here the fallacy of attributing the beneficial result to trial by jury is at once obvious to us, when we shake off our jury worship, and consider the question with minds unclouded by preconceptions. The real difficulty experienced by Courts of equity results from their taking their evidence in writing and from invisible witnesses; and the advantage of what is called "the jury trial" is, that the evidence is taken vivâ voce, and the witness subjected face to face to cross examination. But surely no one will pretend to say, that two or three educated, and legally educated, men, would not be more likely to arrive at the truth with the assistance of open and personal examination of witnesses, than the magic twelve hewers of wood and drawers of water who decide half the trials at law in this country.

Then, with respect to the supposed protection to the subject, arising from the independence and fairness of juries, it should be remembered that the periods of our history when public benefit has most resulted from these qualities of juries, (qualities which we are quite willing to admit the majority of juries, because the majority of Englishmen, are likely to possess) have been periods when the judges were not independent, and when, therefore, there was need of some such intermediate body independent of the Crown; and we are to recollect, that, though juries have often stood between the Crown and the subject, they have at least as often been the exponents and instruments of popular ignorance and popular vindictiveness, in spite of the better counsels of an enlightened judge.

But the most unintelligible qualities of a jury, if viewed as merits, are its mystical dependence on the number 12, and its unalterable adherence to the rule requiring unanimity. On the merits of this peculiar number we confess ourselves wholly unable to descant. It is a mystery, and, as such, we leave it to be dealt with by those whose powers of penetration we cannot even affect to emulate. But the question of unanimity is more on the level of our human powers. And on the gross absurdity of the latter peculiarity, we shall only say this: that, when we recollect that rarely are any three men found to agree entirely in any opinion, or in any inference drawn from even a small number of facts, it is really too shocking to require perfect unanimity of conclusion among twelve men, and those not in general men of acute reasoning powers, upon a mass of facts always conflicting, and generally insufficient.

That actual unanimity is continually not attained, is perfectly well known. The outward unanimity that is obtained is necessarily, in most contested cases, and has been in some confessedly, the result of the influence not of the clearest thinkers over the more obtuse, as would be likely to be the case if a majority decided, but of quantity and quality of muscular fibre and digestive machinery.

Without, therefore, saying that there is nothing in jury trial that is admirable; without saying that the judgment of a single intelligent judge will always be better than that of a jury; we do say, that it is an institution enormously overrated, and praised more from habit than reflection; and we are glad to see the first blow struck at it by a great public measure, such as the County Courts Act. If the result of the proceedings in those courts shall be such as to satisfy Englishmen, that good justice may be had without compelling twelve men to say they agree in an inference, the destruction of the single prestige, on which they based their former creed, will be a great gain to the juridical status of the country.

REFORM IN CONVEYANCING.

Our last Number announced the appointment of a commission for inquiring whether the burthens on land can be diminished by the establishment of an effective system for the registration of deeds and the simplification of the forms of conveyance. We give the commission below, at length. The known energy, as well as ability and practical knowledge, of the commissioners justify a confident expectation of a reform at once searching and judicious. We congratulate the holders of real property on the prospect, and we believe we may, without any inconsistency, include the junior branch of the profession in our congratulation. Such a reform as we look for will sweep away a large amount of professional income derived from useless professional labour, but it will open an extensive field for useful labour, of a more honourable and remunerating character.

The first meeting of the commissioners was held on Wednesday last, at Lord Langdale's house; all the commissioners being present. We understand, that, after discussing the objects of the meeting, the members agreed to proceed at once to the consideration of the necessary forms, with all imaginable vigour.

VICTORIA, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith.—To our right trusty and well-beloved counsellor, HENRY LORD LANGDALE, our Master of the Rolls; our right trusty and well-beloved MILES THOMAS LORD BEAUMONT; and our right trusty and well-beloved JOSEPH HUMPHRY, Esquire, one of our counsel learned in the law; HENRY BELLENDEN KER, and WALTER COULSON, Esquires, barristers at law; and GEORGE FRERE and FRANCIS BRODERIP, Esquires, greeting.—Whereas a Select Committee of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled, which was appointed in the last Session of Parliament to inquire into the Burdens affecting Real Property, have reported that they are convinced that the marketable value of real property is seriously diminished by the tedious and expensive process attending its transfer; that they are anxious to impress on the House the necessity of a thorough revision of the whole subject of conveyancing, and the disuse of the present prolix, expensive, and vexatious system; and that a registry of title to all real property is essential to the success of any attempt to simplify the system of conveyancing; and they have, therefore, recommended the improvement of the law of real property, the simplification of titles, and of the forms of conveyance, and the establishment of some effective system for the registration of deeds. Now know ye, that we, reposing great trust and confidence in your zeal and ability, have constituted and appointed, and do by these presents constitute and appoint, you, the said Henry Lord Langdale, Miles Thomas Lord Beaumont, Joseph Humphry, Henry Bellenden Ker, Walter Coulson, George Frere, and Francis Broderip, or any four or more of you, to be our commissioners for making a full and diligent inquiry whether the burdens on land can be diminished by the establishment of an effective system for the registration of deeds, and the simplification of the forms of conveyance, and by what means the same can be effected. And we do by these presents give and grant to you, or any four or more of you, full power and authority to call before you such persons as you shall judge necessary, by whom you may be the better informed on the subject of this our commission, and of every matter connected therewith; and also to call for, have access to, and examine, all such official books, documents, papers, and records as may afford the fullest information on the subject, and to inquire of and concerning the premises by all other lawful ways and means whatsoever. And we do hereby give and grant to you, or any four or more of you, full power and authority, when the same shall appear to be requisite, to administer an oath or oaths to any person or persons whatsoever to be examined before you concerning the premises. And our further will and pleasure is, that you, or any four or more of you, do and shall certify to us in our Court of Chancery, on parchment, under your hands and seals respectively, your several proceedings in this matter, as the same shall be respectively completed and perfected. And we will and command, and by these presents ordain, that this our commission shall continue in full force and virtue, and that you, or any four or more of you, may from time to time proceed in the execution thereof, and of every matter and thing therein contained, although the same be not continued from time to time by adjournment. And we hereby command all and singular our justices of the peace, sheriffs, mayors, bailiffs, constables, officers, ministers, and all other our loving subjects whatsoever, as well within liberties as without, that they be assistant to you and each of you in the execution of these presents. And for your assistance in the due execution of this our commission, we have made choice of our trusty and well-beloved GEORGE WILLIAMS SANDERS, Esquire, barrister at law, to be secretary to this our commission, and to attend you; whose service and assistance we require you to use from time to time as occasion may require. In witness whereof, we have caused these our letters to be made patent. Witness ourself, at Westminster, the eighteenth day of February, in the tenth year of our reign.

By Writ of Privy Seal,

EDMUNDS.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH. HILARY VACATION.

Reg. v. Hinchcliffe and Another, Justices of Cheahire—Rule discharged, with costs.

Reg. v. The Inhabitants of the Borough of Birmingham—Judgment for the Crown.

Reg. v. Westbrook—
Reg. v. Everest—} Rate in each case to be amended.

Nichols v. Stretton—Same judgment as in Price v. Green in the Exchequer.

Kine v. Evershed—Rule absolute for new trial.

Standon v. Chrismas—Rule absolute for new trial.

Hunter v. Caldwell—Rule discharged.

Turner v. Bates and Others—Claim of cognisance, with respect to two of defendants, disallowed.

Williams v. Chambers—Judgment for defendant.

Robinson v. Manwaring—Rule discharged.

Hill v. Mesnard—Rule discharged.

Hutt v. Morrel—Judgment for defendant.

Damerell v. Protheroe—Rule discharged.

Sharpe v. Bluck—Judgment for defendant.

In Flower v. Roper, the Court granted a rule nisi for a new trial.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

The writ of mandamus is not grantable of right, but by prerogative; it is, as we have seen, the absence or want of a specific legal remedy which gives the Court jurisdiction. (Res v. The Bristol Dock Company, M., 52 Geo. 3, 2 Selw. N. P. 1089). "A party applying for a mandamus," says Buller, J., (Res v. Stafford, 3 T. R. 851), "must make out a legal right, though, if he shew such legal right, and there be also a remedy in equity, that is no answer to an application for a mandamus; for when the Court refuses to grant a mandamus because there is another specific remedy, they mean only a specific remedy at law." But the Court will, under some circumstances, grant a mandamus, although the party applying has another remedy, to compel performance of the act required to be done, viz. by indictment; as if it be important to prevent any great public damage or inconvenience likely to ensue in the case of a public bridge or other work being in a perilous condition, and requiring immediate repair or support. Therefore, where a railway was made under the authority of an act of Parliament, by which it was provided that the public should have the beneficial enjoyment of it, the company having afterwards taken up the railway, an application was made to the Court for a mandamus to compel them to reinstate it. In delivering the judgment of the Court, Abbott, C. J., said, "If an indictment had been a remedy equally convenient, beneficial, and effectual as a mandamus, I should have been of opinion that we ought not to grant a mandamus; but I think it is perfectly clear that an indictment is not such a remedy, for a corporation cannot be compelled by indictment to reinstate the road. The Court may, indeed, in case of a conviction, impose a fine, and that fine may be levied by distress; but the corporation may submit to the payment of the fine, and refuse to reinstate the road; and, at all events, a considerable delay may take place. (Res v. Severn and Wyre Railway Company, 2 B. & Ald. 648; and see Res v. Commissioners of Dean Inlosure, 2 M. & S. 80). Hence it appears that it is no objection to the granting a mandamus to do a particular act, that an indictment will lie for the omission to do that act, if the remedy by indictment is not as beneficial as by mandamus. But if the right, or the obligation sought to be imposed, be at all doubtful, the remedy by indictment must be pursued; for, if an indictment be as effectual, the Court will not grant the writ. (Res v. Corporation of Plymouth, 4 Burr. 2087; Res v. Bristow, 6 T. R. 168; Neale v. West Middlesex Waterworks, 1 J. & W. 35: as to the refusal of specific performance, see 1 Chit. Pract. of the Law, part 2, 832). An application for a mandamus is an application to the discretion of the Court, (per Ashurst, J., in Res v. Commissioners of Excise, 2 T. R. 385), and is a proper remedy in cases of offices of consequence or value, if there be no other remedy: (Res v. Cambridge, 1 W. Black. 552): therefore, it lies to arbitrators to appoint an umpire under a Canal Act. (Res v. Goodrich, 3 Smith's Rep. 368). It is necessary for a party applying for a mandamus to be restored to any office to make out a prima facie title to such office, and shew at least that he has complied with all the forms necessary to constitute his right. In the case of a mandamus to admit, there is a considerable difference, the latter being granted merely to enable the party to try his right, without which he would be left without any legal remedy. (Res v. Jotham, 3 T. R. 578). It seems doubtful whether a mandamus lies to compel a corporation to pay a poor's-rate. The question came before the Court, but was not decided, an objection being taken to the substance of the writ, which was held fatal; and, therefore, it became unnecessary for the Court to pronounce any opinion on the matter. (Rez v. Margate Pier Company, 3 B. & Ald. 220; S. C., 2 Chit. 256). Where certain persons were incorporated by act of Parliament, which directed that all actions against them should be prosecuted against the treasurer or a director for the time being, but that the body, goods, or lands of the treasurer, &c., should not be liable to execution, the arbitrator, to whom the matter was referred, having found against the treasurer, the Court granted a mandamus to the treasurer and directors, commanding them to pay the amount awarded. (Rez v. St. Katherine's Dock Company, 4 B. & Adol. 360; S. C., 1 Nev. & M. 121; Coupe v. Glyn, 3 B. & Adol. 801). In the latter case, where an award was made against the defendant, on application for an attachment for non-payment of the amount, Lord Tenterden, C. J., said, "You may have a mandamus; but where an act of Parliament so clearly shews the intention that a party shall not be personally answerable, we cannot grant an attachment." And a mandamus lies to visitors who have heard the evidence of a case on appeal, but decline to act, to proceed and determine the appeal. (Rez v. Bishop of Worcester, 4 M. & S. 415; see Phillips v. Bury, 2 T. R. 349). (As visitor, it is competent to deprive, as well as correct offences).

It must be borne in mind, that parties seeking to enforce their rights by mandamus must do so within a reasonable time after the omission complained of; for if considerable delay has taken place since the remedy accrued, and other rights have been allowed to grow up in the interim, or if compelling the performance of the act would work a serious injustice, the Court will not interfere. Therefore, where allotments were set out, under an Inclosure Act, to a party claiming them, and possession given in or about 1817, and there was no road to them, nor any access but through allotments made on land sold under the act to other persons, on motion twelve years afterwards, viz. in 1829, for a mandamus to the commissioners, who had not yet published their award, to set out an occupation road to the first-mentioned allotments, the Court held, that the application came too late. In giving judgment, Bayley, J., mentioned a case (Rez v. Stanforth, 1 M. & S. 32) where a motion was made in the year 1813 for a mandamus to compel the commissioners, under a Canal Act, to cause a jury to be summoned, and compensation assessed for lands taken in the year 1799, in which the Court were of the same opinion; and, for that reason, the writ was refused. (Rez v. Commissioners of Cockermouth, 1 B. & Adol. 380). Although, in general, it may be laid down as a rule, (Bagg's case, 11 Rep. 93; 2 Sid. 112), that, where a man is refused admittance, or wrongfully turned out of any office or franchise which concerns the public, or the administration of justice, he may be admitted or restored by mandamus; yet, it having been a matter of controversy as to what shall be said to be such a public office as relates to the administration of justice, or what is sufficient to support the motion, and the Court of late having extended, rather than contracted, its jurisdiction by mandamus, it is deemed expedient to consider in the following chapters some of the principal cases where the Court has granted or refused the writ.

An important alteration has been made by a recent statute, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, in awarding a mandamus to justices, commanding them to grant a distress warrant for a poor's-rate. Formerly, the Court would not direct a mandamus to issue where there was any doubt of the validity of the rate, or liability of the party. (R. v. Newcomb, 4 T. R. 368). But now, by sect. 3 of that statute, it is enacted, that no action, suit, or other proceeding shall be commenced or prosecuted against any person or persons whatsoever, for or by reason of anything done in obedience to any peremptory mandamus issued by any Court having authority to issue writs of mandamus.

It is quite clear, that the Court of Queen's Bench, having a superintendency over all inferior courts and magistrates, may, by the plenitude of its power, correct not only errors in judicial proceedings, but also extrajudicial errors and misdemeanors tending to the oppression of the subject, or any manner of misgovernment, so that no tort or injury, whether public or private, can be committed, but may be reformed and punished according to due course of law; (Bagg's case, 11 Rep. 98; 4 Jur. 71); and, in the exercise of this power, will oblige inferior courts and magistrates to execute that justice which the party is entitled to, and which they are enjoined by law to do: of this there are numerous instances. But though writs of mandamus are daily awarded to judges of inferior courts to give judgments, or to proceed in the execution of their authority, yet they are never granted to aid a jurisdiction, but only to enforce the execution of it. (Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," D.). Therefore, a mandamus lies to compel the judge of an inferior court to give judgment upon a verdict, but the Court will not specify any particular conclusion at which he is to arrive; (Brooks v. Ewer, 1 Stra. 113; Ex parte Amherst, Ventr. 187; Ex parte Morgan, 2 Chit. 250); so, to give judgment on an information of seizure, (Rez v. Tod, 1 Stra. 530), to hear an appeal of journeymen millers, to make a rate, or to hear any other matter which they are required by statute to hear, although upon the hearing they are at liberty to decide as they think fit. (Rez v. The Justices of Kent, 14 East, 385; Reg. v. The West Riding Justices, 1 New Sees. Cas. 247; Rez v. The Justices of Cumberland, 1 M. & S. 190). And if the sheriff or his deputy neglect to enter a plaint in replevin in the county court for damage feasant, the Court would compel him by mandamus, though not by a summary motion. (Ex parte Boyle, 2 D. & R. 12). So, a mandamus lies to grant compensation to the sheriff in lieu of abolished gaol fees; (Rez v. The Justices of Middlesex, 3 B. & Adol. 100); so to commissioners of bankrupt to issue their warrant for further examination; (In re Bromley, 3 D. & R. 310); so to an arbitrator under a local act to appoint an umpire, as therein enjoined; (Rez v. Goodrich, 3 Smith, 388); so to a visitor to hear an appeal and give some judgment. (Rez v. Ely, 5 T. R. 475; Id. 338, 346). And in an application for a mandamus to the Bishop of Lincoln, as visitor of Lincoln College, Oxford, to compel him to determine an appeal of Dr. Halifax, who complained of an undue election to the office of rector of the college, to which another person had been admitted, the Court held, that, where a visitor is appointed, who is to interpret the statutes of a college, and an appeal is lodged with him, they would compel him to hear the parties and form some judgment, though they would not oblige him to go into the merits. (Rez v. The Bishop of Lincoln, T., 25 Geo. 3, B. R.; and see Rez v. Worcester, 4 M. & S. 415). So, to canal commissioners to assess the value of land taken by them pursuant to the provisions of an act of Parliament, and to make compensation. (Rez v. Stanforth, 1 M. & S. 32). Where an executor, appointed by a will, applied to the judge of the Prerogative Court to grant him probate, but which was refused, on the ground that he was absconding, and an insolvent, and had refused to give security to pay the legacies bequeathed, the Court, on application, granted a mandamus to compel it, saying, the ordinary had no authority to interpose and demand caution of the executor, when the testator himself required none. (Rez v. Baines, 1 Raym. 262; S. C., 1 Salk. 290; 3 Salk. 162; 1 Str. 672; Carth. 457; Holt, 310; Holbornwate v. Russell, 2 Atk. 127; S. C., Barnard. C. C. 334; see also 3 P. W. 336, note to Stanning v. Style, (Williams's Executors), 3 Eden, 283; Rez v.

Hay, 4 Burr. 2295; 1 W. Black. 688). So, to grant administration to the next of kin. (Blackborough v. Davies, Raym. 684; S. C., 1 Salk. 38, 251; Comyns, 96; Anon., 1 Str. 552; Res v. The Inhabitants of Horsley, 8 East, 408; Offey v. Beets, 1 Lev. 187; S. C., 1 Sid. 371). And where a person claimed to hold a court-leet, at which the in-burgesses were bound to attend to make a jury, but which they refused, the Court, on application; granted a mandamus to compel them. (Ex parte The Rector of Wigan, 2 Str. 1207). If an application be made for a mandamus to the judges of an inferior court to admit an attorney, it ought not to be directly to admit, but only to examine whether he be capable and qualified to be admitted. (Res v. York, 3 B. & Adol. 770).

Where a charter granted that the steward and suitors of a manor should have power to hold a court for the determination of civil suits, and it appeared there had been a non-user for fifty years, except for the purpose of levying fines, the Court, on application, granted a mandamus to compel the steward of the court to receive the plaint of a tenant within the manor for the recovery of a debt due to him, saying, that the words of permission in the charter were obligatory, and, therefore, the right could not be lost by non-user. (Res v. The Steward, &c. of Havering-Atto-Bower, 5 B. & Ald. 691; S. C., 2 D. & R. 176; see also Res v. The Mayor and Jurats of Hastings, 1 D. & R. 148; S. C., 5 B. & Ald. 692, n.) So where, by the custom of the borough of Medhurst, the jury, at a court-baron, were to present the alienation of every burgage tenement, and, upon such presentment, the steward was bound to admit the tenant, who then became entitled to the franchises of the borough, the jury having refused, at a court-baron, to present several conveyances of burgage tenements, the Court granted a mandamus to the lord to hold a court, and to the burgesses to attend and present the conveyances. (Res v. Midhurst, 1 Wils. 283; S. C., 1 Black. Rep. 60; S. C., nom. Res v. Lord Montague, Bull. N. P. 200; though one mandamus will not lie to restore several persons, yet in this case the Court held one mandamus sufficient to the jury to do an act to perfect the rights of several). So, where by custom the court-leet was to present to the steward the person whom the commonalty of the borough had chosen to be mayor, the Court granted a mandamus to the steward to hold a court, and to the in-burgesses to attend and present C. D., who had been so chosen. (The Borough of Christ Church, 12 Geo. 2, Bull. N. P. 200; S. C., cited in 1 Black. 62). So, where the corporation of Grantham refused to allow the lord of the manor to hold a court-leet and baron in the Town-hall on two prescriptive days, the Court granted a mandamus to compel them. (Res v. The Corporation of Grantham, 2 Black. 716; Res v. Colebrooke, 2 Ld Kenyon, 163; see also Res v. Boughey, 1 B. & C. 565; Res v. Ilchester, 2 B. & C. 764; but see Res v. Wigan, 1 Wils. 76).

We have already seen that the Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere with the practice of an inferior Court otherwise than by compelling them to hear, or, having heard, to give judgment upon any matter before them; for the party aggrieved has another remedy in the event of an erroneous judgment, viz. to sue out a writ of error. Therefore, the Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere by mandamus to compel a Court of inferior jurisdiction to grant a new trial in a cause before it, in which alleged injustice had been done to one of the parties. In an application for this purpose, the Court, in giving judgment, said, "We may command the judge of an inferior court to give judgment in a matter fit and proper for its cognizance; but we cannot, in this manner, review his proceedings, or try, upon affidavit, any alleged irregularity in his judgment: if there is an erroneous judgment, a writ of error lies; but we cannot tell the judge what he is to do." (Ex parte Morgan, 2 Chit. 250; see also The Mayor, &c. of Bristol, 2 Salk. 650; Reg. v. Hill, Id., 201). Where an action of debt for use and occupation was brought in the Palace Court, and the defendant suffered judgment by default, the prothonotary of that Court refused to allow the plaintiff to sign final judgment, as by law it was contended he might. On application to the Court, they refused a mandamus to compel it, leaving the plaintiff to his remedy by writ of error. (Res v. Conyngham, 1 D. & R. 529; S. C., nom. Arden v. Cornel, 5 B. & Ald. 885). So, where a deputy bailiff who held courts for the steward of a manor, having warned a jury to attend a court for the purpose of electing a mayor for the ensuing year, and the steward, having reason to suspect an undue bias in summoning the jury, revoked his deputation, so that no court was held, and the mayor not chosen on the prescriptive day, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to the lord to hold a court-leet in order to proceed to the election. (Res v. Bankes and others, 1 Wm. Black. 452; S. C., 3 Burr. 1452). Where the validity of a will is disputed, and a suit is depending to try the fact, the Court will not direct a mandamus to the judge of the ecclesiastical court to grant probate lite pendente. (Lovegrove v. Bethel, 1 Black. Rep. 668; S. C., 4 Burr. 2295; Res v. Bettesworth, 2 Str. 857; Id. 891, 956, 1111, 1118; see also Res v. Dr. Hay, 1 Black. 640). So, where an application was made by the father of an intestate for administration to be granted to him durante minori etate of his grandson, which the ordinary had refused, the Court refused the writ, saying, that, when they granted a mandamus, it was to oblige the judge to do right to the party applying; and, as there was no law directing to whom administrations, during minority, should be granted, there was no law to put it in execution. (Smith's case, 2 Str. 892).

DISEASED and HEALTHY LIVES ASSURED. MEDICAL, INVALID, and GENERAL LIFE OFFICE, 25, Pall Mall, London, and 22, Nassau Street, Dublin.
Subscribed Capital, £500,000.

THIS Office was established in 1841, and possesses Tables formed on a scientific Basis for the Assurance of Diseased Lives.

The urgent necessity for such an Institution may be estimated by the fact, that two-thirds of the Population are not assured as Healthy Lives, and that about one in five of the Applicants to other Offices is declined on Examination.

And that, during the period of five years, as shewn at the Annual General Meeting of the Proprietors in November last, upwards of 2000 proposals had been made to the Society, covering Assurances to above One Million.

It is the only Company possessing tabulated Rates of Premium for Disease deduced from extensive data.

HEALTHY LIVES, both at Home and in Foreign Climates, are Assured with as much facility and at lower Rates than at most other Offices; and a capital of HALF-A-MILLION sterling, fully subscribed, affords a complete guarantee for the fulfilment of the Company's engagements.

LONDON, MARCH 6, 1847.

THERE is no branch of our criminal jurisprudence more involved in apparent uncertainty than that which relates to the law of conspiracy. Notwithstanding the numerous cases which have been decided upon the subject, it yet appears never to have undergone so full and searching an investigation as to enable us clearly to point out the principles on which it may be said to rest. In an age of associations, like the present, this question must undoubtedly be brought to an issue; and we understand that a very important trial is about to take place at Lancaster, in which the right of workmen to combine for the purpose of raising their wages, and to persuade others to join them in their endeavours, will inevitably be raised, and fully discussed.

The law, so far as it has to deal with a conspiracy for a purpose evidently illegal, or for a legal purpose to be effected by illegal means, is clear; but grave doubts exist where the purpose and the means are in themselves legal, whether the very combination or concert can impart illegality to the transaction. The question is, whether it can be considered contrary to law for several to agree to do that which one person would be justified in doing. Supposing the act to be accomplished, and the means whereby it is to be accomplished to be innocent per se, can the fact of a number agreeing to do that act by those means in any way alter the character of the proceeding? In those cases, where numbers may be said to be of the essence of the offence, as riots and unlawful assemblies, the mere assemblage, under certain circumstances, has a tendency to a breach of the peace; but we can easily imagine cases where this feature would be wanting—as an agreement amongst workmen to remain out of work, and peaceably to persuade others to follow their example, until a certain rate of wages should be adopted by their employers. If it be objected to an agreement of this kind, that it has a tendency to injure an individual, (the master), it may be replied, so have all opposition companies or trades a tendency to injure others; and that, in a case like this, the primary object among the workmen is to better their own condition, not to injure others. If it then be objected that it tends to restrain trade, and, therefore, is against public policy, we think it may be fairly answered, that there is no ground for making this presumption, but that it may be very beneficial to trade and to the public in general to keep wages at a fair and reasonable standard. And, indeed, the Combination Act (6 Geo. 4, c. 129) seems to recognise this proposition, by allowing either workmen or employers to agree amongst themselves for the rate of wages, which the one will demand, and the other pay. Not that this act settles the question of conspiracy among workmen, for it will arise if they go further than agree, and persuade or peaceably prevent others from entering into employment. The law, as it is at present supposed to bear on this matter, is thus stated by Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, in Dickenson's Guide to the Quarter Sessions, (5th edit. p. 335):—"Mere concert is not, in itself, a crime; for associations to prosecute felons, and even to put laws in force against political offenders, have been holden legal. If, then, there be no indictable offence in the object,—no indictable offence in the means,—and no indictable offence in the concert, in what part of the conspiracy is the offence to be found? Can several circumstances, each perfectly lawful, make up an unlawful act? . . . The utmost limits of the modern doctrine of conspiracy seem to be reached in the decisions respecting concerted disapprobation of a performer or a piece at a theatre. The case of Macklin is well known, on whose prosecution several persons were convicted for hissing him on his appearance in one of Garrick's favourite characters; and, in accordance with this precedent, Sir J. Mansfield is said to have expressed himself in Clifford v. Brandon, (2 Cam. 369), in the following terms:—"The audience have certainly a right to express by applause or hisses the sensations of the moment; and nobody has ever hindered, or would ever question, the exercise of that right. But, if any body of men were to go to the theatre with the settled intention of hissing an actor, or damning a piece, there can be no doubt such a deliberate and preconcerted scheme would amount to a conspiracy, and that the persons concerned in it might be brought to punishment." "In this case," observes Serjeant Talfourd, "the act is lawful, the means are lawful, the motive may be even laudable, as if a notoriously immoral piece were announced, and the parties determined to oppose it; and yet the concert alone makes the crime. It is extremely difficult to understand this, unless concert be a crime; and still more difficult to reconcile it, or many other of the cases, to the decision of the King's Bench in 1811, (R. v. Turner, 13 East, 228), where it was holden that an indictment would not lie for a conspiracy to enter a preserve for hares, the property of another, for the purpose of ensnaring them in the night time, and with offensive weapons."

The doctrine laid down in Macklin's case and in Clifford v. Brandon, was confirmed and applied in the case of Gregory v. The Duke of Brunswick, (1 C. & K. 28; 6 Man. & G. 953). But we cannot avoid seeing that this class of cases may be upheld, on the ground that an agreement amongst several to express disapprobation in a public assembly may lead to a breach of the peace*, and that its primary object appears to be a malicious desire to injure an individual.

There are, however, cases in which it has been held, that, although every man may work at what price he pleases, yet a combination not to work under certain prices is indictable. (See Mawbey's case, 6 T. R. 636; Case of the Journeymen Tailors at Cambridge, 8 Mod. 11; Eccle's case, 1 Leach, 276; Ferguson's case, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 489; Hammond's case, 2 Esp. 720; Byerdike's case, 1 M. & R. 179).

With regard, however, to these decisions, it is to be observed, that they all, with the exception of Byerdike's case, occurred before the passing of the Combination Act; that Byerdike's case was a Nisi Prius decision, in which the question does not appear to have been fully argued, or any reason given for the opinion of the learned judge, which was to the effect, that workmen have no right to dictate to their masters as to the persons whom they shall employ.

It should also be remarked, that it was held by Lord Ellenborough, that an indictment will not lie for a conspiracy to commit even a wrong, if it be a merely civil wrong, as to enter another man's ground in search of game. (R. v. Turner, 13 East, 228; and see also, R. v. Pywell, 1 Stark. 402; R. v. Stratton, 1 Camp. 549, to the same effect).

In order to extricate some principle from the mass of cases on this subject, it is necessary to inquire into the true nature and definition of the offence of conspiracy.

* In confirmation of this view, it may be stated, that in Macklin's case the indictment was for a riot, not for a mere conspiracy. (See 1 C. & K. 28, n).

It is an offence that has greatly changed its character in the course of time. Formerly it seems to have been confined to an agreement falsely to accuse a man of a crime. (See, per Lord Ellenborough, R. v. Turner, 33 Ed. 1, st. 2; Vin. Abr. "Conspiracy;" 9 Co. 57. a.) The definition, however, now received, and that which has been given to it by learned judges in modern and the best considered cases, is "an agreement between two or more to commit an unlawful act, or a lawful act by unlawful means." (R. v. Seward, 1 Adol. & Ell. 713; R. v. Biers, Id. 328; R. v. Fowler, 1 East, P. C. 481; R. v. Peck, 9 Adol. & Ell. 686; R. v. Jones, 4 B. & Ad. 345; R. v. Richardson, 1 M. & Rob. 402; R. v. Vincent, 9 C. & P. 91; O'Connell and others v. The Queen, 11 Cl. & Fin. 155). Thus, in Res v. Seward, it was held, that an indictment did not lie for conspiring to exonerate a parish from the charge of a pauper, and to throw it on another; nor for conspiring to cause paupers to marry, unless fraud, threats, or force were alleged. It was said by Lord Denman, in that case, "An indictment for a conspiracy ought to shew either that it was for an unlawful purpose, or to effect a lawful purpose by unlawful means." In the case of O'Connell v. The Queen, the late Chief Justice Tindal delivered it as the unanimous opinion of the judges that "the crime of conspiracy is complete if two, or more than two, should agree to an illegal thing; that is, to effect something in itself unlawful, or to effect, by unlawful means, something which, in itself, may be indifferent, or even lawful. The gist of the offence of conspiracy is the bare engagement and association to break the law."

From this review of the cases and dicta relating to the law upon this subject, we come to the conclusion, that there is not any mystical nor any criminal meaning in the term "conspiracy" itself; that it is a mere agreement, and nothing more; that the object in view, or means used, must be illegal to impart criminality to this agreement; and that it can no longer be contended that a combination to effect a legal purpose by legal acts or instruments is an indictable offence.

REBIBLIO

Contributory Remarks on a General Registry, with an Appendix, containing the Questions and Plan of the Real Property Commissioners. By WILLIAM WOOD HUMPHRY, Esq., Barrister at Law.—8vo., pp. 105. [Stevens, 1830.]

Our inducements to this retrospective review, or rather, notice, are the merits of Mr. Humphry's pamphlet, and the revived interest of its subject. We have no doubt that the commission now sitting will recommend the trial of a general register of some kind, and as little that the Legislature will act upon the suggestion. We believe that the majority of the lawyers who have thought upon the subject, approve of the principle of registration; but the profession is certainly not unanimous even so far; and the question whether there is to be a register of any kind or not, though already settled, as we believe, will be much discussed. It is desirable that this preliminary discussion should be cut as short as possible, in order that the much more difficult investigation of the principle and details of the plan most fit to be acted on should receive the undisturbed attention of the profession. To determine whether titles should be registered is an inquiry not beyond the abilities and information of the laity; but all beyond this must be confided to professional learning and skill. We think, therefore, that we are doing good service by calling attention to this pamphlet, distinguished as it is among the able publications in favour of a general register which appeared during the existence of the late Real Property Commission, by the conciseness and cogency with which it states the principal arguments in favour of a register, and refutes the leading objections to the scheme.

In the course of some remarks on the prevailing uncertainty of titles, Mr. Humphry says:—"Instruments affecting the legal estate, as settlements, mortgages, and other incumbrances, though essential to its perfection, are frequently related to the title as a sort of excrescences, susceptible of separation from it, without leaving any mark or scar to indicate their existence; and if, upon the face of the abstract, there appears to be notwithstanding an unbroken chain of title, it is evident their absence can excite no suspicion. The purchaser conceives, and, having used all possible caution, is fairly warranted in conceiving, himself to be in possession of that great object of the conveyancer's anxiety, the legal estate. At some subsequent period, however, the latent document is produced by some adverse claimant who is innocent of its concealment. The legal estate of the deluded purchaser then turns out to be but the phantom of that technical essence, which has in reality all along resided with another. The legal force of his adversary's claim is irresistible; with the phantom, therefore, vanishes the substance on which he has expended his money. He is probably without redress; for it may happen that no one is responsible for the defect, or the party, who would be liable to make reparation, is not to be found, or not in a condition to make it. Cases of this sort, when they occur, are of the most grievous description. There is neither antidote nor remedy for them in the present state of the law. They may be ranked among its most flagrant reproaches."

He then notices the cases in which a purchaser may be affected by the suppression of equitable claims, and examines into the merits of the "attendant term" militia, as expounded by Mr. Coote and other admirers. This part of the discussion happily possesses now only an historical interest. After shewing how, in other cases than those of attendant terms, the legal estate may stand as a kind of Swiss, to be engaged by the first or the highest bidder among a number of conflicting equitable claimants, and how the interesting operation of "squeezing out" is effected under the complacent auspices of a Court of equity, and sketching the favourite scene of "tabula in naufragio," our author passes to the consideration of title deeds, their possession and suppression, and the deposit of them. The nuisance of judgment and prerogative liens, which has since been somewhat abated, comes next under review, and then we arrive at the important head of "Notice."

"Last in the train of causes affecting the certainty, and thereby the security, of titles, comes the equitable doctrine of Notice. To the transcendent law of Notice bends even the great rule of equity respecting the legal estate, which we have mentioned as superior to that of priority of claims; for the legal estate, and all other constituents of title, are unavailing, if a person at the time of purchasing or lending his money on the property had notice of a prior claim upon it. And it is unquestionably agreeable to the dictates of conscience, by which equity professes to regulate its decisions, that a man with notice of a substantial right existing in one person, should not be permitted to deprive him of that right, by dealing with another person for a right that is merely technical, as by 'buying an estate of a trustee, with notice of the trust. It is not the principle, but the indeterminate (perhaps in its very nature illimitable) extent of the doctrine, which exposes it to objection. Notice is divided into actual and constructive. The first requires no observation; it is what every man understands by notice. The latter defies definition. The best, perhaps, that can be given of it, though somewhat paradoxical, is, that it is that sort of notice which a man may have without knowing it. From the publicity of our judicial proceedings, every man in the kingdom is presumed to be cognizant of them. The pendency of a suit is, therefore, notice of the plaintiff's claim. The slightest mention of one deed in another is notice of all the contents of the former, and, as a consequence, of all the contents of all deeds therein mentioned, and so on interminably. Notice to the agent or attorney, and in some cases the counsel of the purchaser, whilst acting in those capacities, is constructive notice to the purchaser himself. So also is notice to the town agent of the purchaser's solicitor in the country. It is not necessary that the notice to any of these should be direct and positive; it may be inferred from a variety of circumstances, and very obscure intimations are sometimes held to be sufficient. It is not absolutely necessary even that there should ever have been the slightest connection or communication between a purchaser and the agent; for if a person with notice of a claim contract for an estate in my name without my authority, and I afterwards assent to the contract, I make him my agent ab initio, and am in this way affected with the notice to him. Thus we have constructive notice built on constructive agency—

'Fabrics of air, on airy bases raised.'

"It would be an unprofitable labour to attempt even a brief recital of the various modes by which a man may be charged with the knowledge of things, of which he has not the faintest suspicion, and that, perhaps, after many years quiet enjoyment of the estate. It is, without question, hypothetically true, that if a purchaser (with certain other conditions) be without notice of a prior claim, he is almost to a moral certainty safe in the possession of the estate. But the fact is, that a purchaser never can be sure that he is without notice, and therefore there is no moral certainty. But, assuming that there is nothing to charge him with notice of an existing claim, the impossibility of proving this negative may constitute an objection to the title on a future sale of the property. Opinions, perhaps, are not quite unanimous on this latter point, but the doubt is sufficient for our purpose. It is no satisfactory answer to all this to say, that the doctrine may be traced up to a moral principle. Little is the advantage of purity at the source, if the stream be corrupted before it reaches us. The mischief of the doctrine is its uncertainty. Its legal morality, without legal certainty, spoils both law and morals. The doctrine of notice, nevertheless, bad as it is, as a standard for measuring the accountability of purchasers, must still be retained, as a consistent and essential part of our system of secret conveyances, until a better standard can be found in the place of it."

In the course of his observations on the proposed remedy for these evils, Mr. Humphrey says:—"The obvious merits of a registry have been ingeniously converted by Mr. Coote into an argument against it. He remarks that the advantages of a general registry are so obvious and lie so much on the surface, that a suspicion arises that it would not have been left to the present generation to have established the register, had not the evils of its adoption in former times been found to have more than counterbalanced the good. Men of great depth of thought and general learning have preceded us, who, I am induced to 'believe, would never otherwise have preferred the 'cumbersome and somewhat expensive machinery now 'employed for the protection of purchasers when so 'simple a remedy as a general registry was ready for 'their adoption'. This sort of argument, so prevalent 'and convincing in former times, is now daily wearing 'out. We occasionally, however, meet with it, and 'then we are driven to the common-place answer, that 'the long endurance of an evil is no reason why it 'should be endured for ever. Ineffectual attempts to 'establish something in the nature of a general registry 'have been made at various periods in our history. 'These have failed, partly for want of a well digested 'plan, and partly from popular, but more from profes- 'sional, prejudices. It is not, however, an untried 'expedient. Local registries have long been, and are 'now, at work in Middlesex and Yorkshire, and though 'their protection does not extend to equitable interests, 'and their beneficial tendency as it regards legal estates, 'has been almost completely neutralized, by certain 'impolitic rules of notice applied to them, we have yet 'heard no complaint of their mischievous operation: on 'the contrary, inefficient and imperfect as they are, the 'general impression seems to be in favour of their utili- 'ty. In addition to these domestic experiments, the 'existence of similar institutions in Ireland, Scotland, 'and our West India colonies and foreign countries, 'may be taken as experimental arguments, sufficient 'to remove any apprehensions on the score of dangerous 'innovation.

"Among the objections to a registry the most popu- 'lar is, that it would occasion a vexatious and prejudi- 'cial exposure of private transactions. Though I en- 'tertain, myself, no apprehension on the ground of 'actual exposure from a registry, I am still not inclined 'to underrate the nature of the objection. I do not 'altogether agree with some of the advocates of the 'measure on this point. I cannot go the length of 'considering exposure abstractedly an advantage. The 'feudal ceremonies, observed on the alienation of the 'tenancy, have been adverted to by almost every 'writer on registration. These ceremonies were open 'and notorious in their character, and well enough 'adapted to the objects of that singular system in 'which they originated, and the unlettered simplicity 'of the times in which they prevailed: and, when 'accompanied by the charter, or written memorial of 'the transaction, operated as sufficient checks upon the 'clandestine introduction of a new tenant to the feud. 'Their total inaptitude, however, to the habits and 'ideas of a refined and commercial people, and the 'various modifications of property now in use, leaves 'us nothing to regret in their silent abrogation by the 'substitution of more convenient though more private 'methods of transfer. Necessity and good sense have 'triumphed over them, and, in despite of legislative 'and professional whinings, we are now pretty well 'disencumbered of them. Refinement and commerce 'are both averse to exposure in private dealings: one 'from sensitiveness, the other from interest. And in "* Letter to the Commissioners, page 9.

'† It is said, that it is the practice in the Middlesex Office 'to enter a memorial, containing a true description of the 'nature of the deed, besides the date and names and additions 'of the parties, which alone are required by the Act, and that 'this is the case even with respect to mortgages. It is difficult, 'even though no objection were felt to exposure, to account 'for an exposure that is gratuitous. The practice has prob- 'ably arisen ex abundanti cautela, a phrase employed by 'lawyers as an excuse for their superfluous doings. In mort- 'gages the memorial is prepared by the mortgagee's solicitor; 'and as it respects the mortgagor, to whom alone secrecy is an 'object, the nature of the transaction may be considered as 'introduced in invitum. But probably the parties rationally 'consider that the exposure occasioned by a registry exists

'truth, it is not publicity, it is not notoriety of transfer, 'that we require: it is proof when wanted: proof on 'the demand of those who are entitled to its production. 'It seems to be considered by some gentlemen that 'exposure, supposing it to be a certain consequence of 'a registry, is in reality one of its commendable fea- 'tures: that it would tend to check inordinate specu- 'lations in commerce; and be useful to creditors by 'affording them information as to the actual state of 'their debtors' affairs; the relation of debtor and cre- 'ditor giving the latter a sort of right to inspect the 'incumbrances existing on the estates of the former. 'I confess I do not like these imputed virtues of the 'registry: nor do I think they pertain to it. The idea 'of checking the extravagance of commercial enterprise 'by a registry, strikes me as being quite chimerical: it 'is besides quite beyond its legitimate object, which is 'the protection of purchasers and others contracting 'specifically for an estate, or a security upon it, with a 'valid and unincumbered title. Why should we ascribe 'to a registry an effect which it is incapable of pro- 'ducing, and, if produced, would be of questionable 'tendency? Neither has a general creditor any fair 'pretensions to know the claims upon his debtor's 'estates. The giving of credit is optional: it is given 'to the person, upon a general impression of his respon- 'sibility, mixed with personal confidence. It is essen- 'tial to the activity of commerce, and is, and ever must 'be, as its very name implies, a reliance upon some- 'thing that may deceive us. A trader takes the chances 'of the game he is playing, and regulates his profits 'accordingly. Prudence and caution in his dealings 'are his best securities. What amount of credit is it 'that should give a man the privilege to inspect his 'debtor's title to his lands, 10*l.*, 50*l.*, 100*l.*, or what other 'amount? or is every creditor great and small entitled 'to it? Not only has a creditor no fair pretensions to 'this information, but it could scarcely ever be of use 'to him, when obtained. It exhibits only one side of 'a man's affairs, and that but partially. It could be of 'little advantage to a creditor to know that his debtor 'owed a particular debt and to know that only: since 'it can never afford any safe criterion of solvency or 'insolvency. For any useful purpose to the creditor, 'we ought to have not only a registry of title deeds, 'but a registry of ledgers also: and to this extent, it 'seems to me that the argument for exposure, as an 'advantage, if tenable at all, ought to be pushed. I 'think also the exposure of domestic or family arrange- 'ments of property could be productive of no utility, 'and that it would be in some measure opposed to our 'feelings. We do not like to live in houses with 'transparent walls, though our lives may be innocent. 'I cannot, for the sake of making every argument 'point in the same direction, consent to call evil good 'and good evil. Nor do I think such a course of argu- 'ment calculated to promote the final success of the 'measure. My own conviction, perhaps a mistaken 'one, is, that the popular aversion to exposure in these 'matters is founded in some degree on reason and cor- 'rect feeling; and that inquisition into titles by credi- 'tors and strangers would, if it were to take place to 'any considerable extent, be an evil of some amount, 'though incomparably less than the mass of those evils 'which a registry would cure. But I agree with all 'the advocates of registration in their strong point: I 'agree with them in thinking that the objection on the 'ground of exposure does not lie against a registry: 'not because exposure is in itself a virtue, but because 'it would not in reality take place to any extent de-

'only in imagination.' [We believe that the exuberance of 'information in the Middlesex Memorials springs from no pro- 'fessional caution, but is merely an abuse of the office for the 'sake of increasing fees.]

‘serving consideration. As a registry could afford no ‘satisfactory or useful information to any persons but ‘those concerned in the title to an estate, it would ‘remain hermetically sealed to all others, for want of ‘a motive to look into it. In order, however, to conciliate the public mind on the tenderest point of our ‘subject, and to guard against a danger, existing, as I ‘think, only in popular apprehension, means might be ‘adopted to secure the register against impertinent inspection. In the chapter on the details of the registry ‘will be found an expedient for that purpose.”

We make no observations, at present, on Mr. Humphry’s propositions for registry laws, because, though well deserving of consideration, they fall, in many respects, far short of what we venture to hope from the existing commission.

RULES OF PRACTICE FOR THE COUNTY COURTS IN ENGLAND.

Rule 1. Every plaint must be entered upon application at the office of the clerk, pursuant to the form in the Plaintiff Book in the schedule to these rules annexed.

Rule 2. On entering the plaint, the plaintiff shall, if the sum sought to be recovered shall exceed 5*l.*, deliver at the office of the clerk as many copies of a statement of the particulars of his demand, or cause of action, as there are defendants, with an additional copy to file; provided always, that in all cases, the judge, in his discretion, and on such terms as he may think fit, may adjourn the cause at the hearing, for the delivery of a statement of particulars or further particulars.

Rule 3. At the time of entering the plaint, the Clerk of the Court shall give to the plaintiff a note according to the form in the said schedule; and no money shall be paid out of court to the plaintiff unless on production of such note, or by order of the judge.

Rule 4. The summons to appear to a plaint shall be issued according to the forms in the schedule, and shall be dated as of the day on which the plaint was entered.

Rule 5. The clerk shall annex to each summons to be served one of the copies of the statement of the particulars of the plaintiff’s demand furnished to him pursuant to Rule 2, sealed with the seal of the court.

Rule 6. Every such summons must be served ten clear days before the holding of the court at which it shall be returnable.

Rule 7. The service of any summons to appear to a plaint must be either personal, or by delivering the same to some person at the place of abode, or the place of business of the defendant.

Rule 8. Where a defendant shall be living or serving on board of any ship or vessel, or be residing or quartered in any barracks, and serving her Majesty as a soldier or marine, it shall be sufficient service to deliver the summons to the senior officer on board, or to the person who may at the time have charge of such ship or vessel, or to the adjutant of the corps, or any officer or sergeant of the company to which such soldier or marine shall belong, or be attached.

Rule 9. Where a defendant shall be working in any mine or other works carried on under ground, and the bailiff shall not be able to serve him with a summons, as hereinbefore directed, it shall be sufficient service to deliver the summons to the engine-man, banks-man, or other person in charge of such mine or works.

Rule 10. Where any defendant shall, by keeping his house or place of abode closed, or by violence or threats, prevent any bailiff from serving the summons as hereinbefore directed, and such summons shall have been affixed on the door of such house or place of abode, or otherwise served as nearly as may be according to the mode hereinbefore directed, such service shall be deemed good service.

Rule 11. Provided that in all cases where a summons to appear to a plaint shall not have been served personally, and the defendant shall not appear at the return day, it must be proved to the satisfaction of the judge that the service of such summons has come to the knowledge of the defendant ten clear days before the said return day.

Rule 12. Where any such summons has not been served as hereinbefore directed, the judge may, in his discretion, in order to save the Statute of Limitations, direct another summons or successive summonses to be issued, bearing the same date and number as the first summons.

Rule 13. The bailiff who serves a summons to appear to a plaint shall indorse on a copy of such summons the time and manner of the service thereof, and shall produce such copy, so indorsed, at the court at which such summons shall be returnable, and such copy shall be filed by the Clerk of the Court.

Rule 14. The above Rules, except Rule 11, as to the mode of service of summonses to appear to a plaint, shall apply to the service of all summonses, judgments, orders, notices, and processes whatsoever, issuing under the authority of the said act, except where otherwise directed by the said act, or any rule under the authority thereof.

Rule 15. Where the defendant pays money into court, the same must be paid into court five clear days before the return of the summons.

Rule 16. If the plaintiff elect to accept, in full satisfaction of the debt or damages claimed, such part thereof as shall have been paid into court by the defendant, and shall give a written notice to that effect to the Clerk of the Court, and a like notice to the defendant, by serving the same on such defendant personally, or leaving it at his place of abode or business three clear days before the return of the summons, the action shall be discontinued, and the plaintiff shall not be liable to any further costs. But in default of giving such notice the suit will proceed; and if the plaintiff do not appear at the hearing, he shall be liable to pay to the defendant such costs as he may incur in appearing to try the cause, or such other sum of money as the judge may order.

Rule 17. Where a defendant desires to set off any debt or demand alleged to be due to him by the plaintiff, he must give notice thereof in writing to the Clerk of the Court, and deliver to such Clerk two copies of a statement of the particulars of such set-off five clear days before the return of the summons.

Rule 18. The Clerk of the Court shall give to the plaintiff a notice of such set-off, according to the form in the schedule, in manner directed by the act, together with one of the copies of such particulars of set-off, sealed with the seal of the Court: Provided always, that where such notice shall not have been given, the judge in his discretion, and on such terms as he shall think fit, may adjourn the hearing of the cause, to enable the defendant to give such notice such number of days before the day to which the hearing may be adjourned, as the judge shall think proper.

Rule 19. Where a defendant intends to rely on the special defence of infancy, coverture, the Statute of Limitations, or his discharge under any statute relating to bankrupts, or any act for the relief of insolvent debtors, he shall give notice in writing to the Clerk of the Court, five clear days before the day on which the summons is returnable: Provided always, that where such notice shall not have been given, the judge, in his discretion, and on such terms as he shall think fit, may adjourn the hearing of the cause, to enable the defendant to give such notice such number of days before the day to which the hearing may be adjourned, as the judge may think proper.

Rule 20. Every notice of a demand of a jury, where the debt or demand claimed shall exceed 5*l.*, must be made in writing to the Clerk of the Court two clear days before the return of the summons.

Rule 21. No application for a new trial, or to set aside any proceedings, shall be made subsequently to the court at which such trial or other proceeding shall have been had, unless the party making such application shall have given a written notice thereof to the Clerk of the Court at his office, and to the other party, by serving the same personally on such party, or leaving the same at his usual place of abode or business, seven clear days before the time of holding the court at which such application shall be made.

Rule 22. Where any money is paid into court under any execution or order of the Court, if the clerk receive notice from any party of his intention to apply to the Court to set aside the execution or order under which such money is paid into court, the clerk shall retain the same until after such application has been determined, or until the judge shall otherwise order.

Rule 23. When any order is made for the payment of any debt, damages, costs, or other sum of money by instalments, such instalments shall be payable at the office of the Clerk of Court, at such periods as the Court shall order; and if no order be made, then the first shall become due at the expiration of one calendar month from the day of making the order, and every successive instalment at like periods of a calendar month from the day of the previous instalment becoming due.

Rule 24. Where any cattle, goods, or chattels taken as a distress for rent in arrear, or damage faisant, shall have been replevied by the sheriff, the party at whose instance such replevin shall have been made shall enter his plaint in the court held under the authority of this act, for the district within which such distress may have been made.

Rule 25. On entering a plaint or replevin, the plaintiff must specify and describe in a statement of particulars, the cattle, or the several goods and chattels taken under the distress, and of the taking of which he complains.

Rule 26. All actions of replevin in cases of distress for rent in arrear, or damage faisant, shall be tried in a summary way as all other actions in the courts held under the authority of this act, and the judgment therein in ordinary cases, whether for plaintiff or defendant, shall be according to the forms in the Schedule, or to the like effect.

Rule 27. Execution on a judgment is not to issue by or against any person not a party to such suit, without a plaint and summons upon the judgment, the proceedings in which shall be the same as in ordinary cases.

Rule 28. Where a judgment has been given for or against a person deceased, his executors or administrators may in the same manner sue or be sued upon the judgment.

Rule 29. The ordinary judgment against executors or administrators shall be, to pay the debt or damages and costs to be levied out of the goods of the deceased in their hands, and as to the costs, if there are no such goods, then to be levied out of their own goods.

Rule 30. Where the defence is, that executors or administrators have fully administered, if it be adjudged by the Court that they have assets not administered, then a like judgment shall go as in the above case, but only as to the goods of the deceased, to the amount proved to be in their hands, and of assets quando acciderint, as to the residue; the judgment as to costs shall be, that they be levied de bonis testatoris si, &c., et si non, de bonis propriis.

Rule 31. If the sole defence by executors or administrators be, that they have fully administered, and the judgment of the Court is for the defendants, it shall be, that the amount found to be due be paid and levied out of the assets of the deceased quando acciderint, and the costs shall be in the discretion of the judge.

Rule 32. Where judgment has been given against executors and administrators, that the amount be levied upon the assets of the deceased quando acciderint, the plaintiff may at any time proceed by plaint against them, suggesting that assets have come to their hands, and the Court shall proceed and give judgment thereon, if for the plaintiff, as in Rule 29, and if for the defendants, they shall be entitled to their costs.

Rule 33. Where judgment has been given that the debt (or damages) and costs be levied de bonis testatoris, and the plaintiff complains that the defendants have been guilty of a devastavit, inasmuch as no goods of the deceased are forthcoming to satisfy the execution issued, then a summons may be taken out in the form given in the Schedule, or to the like effect, and thereupon, as in ordinary cases, the Court shall proceed to the hearing and judgment, and if judgment be given against such executors or administrators, then it shall be that they pay the debt, or damages and costs, to be levied de bonis testatoris si, &c. et si non, de bonis propriis.

Rule 34. Where in an action against executors or administrators, the defence is, that they are not executors or administrators, or it is founded on some matter or thing arising since the death of the testator or intestate, ex. gr. a release to the defendants, if the judgment of the Court be against them, it shall be, that the debt, or damages and costs, be levied and paid de bonis testatoris si, &c., et si non, de bonis propriis.

Rule 35. The judge shall in each case order what number of witnesses shall be allowed on taxation of costs, the allowance for whose attendance shall be according to the scale in the Schedule, unless otherwise ordered, but in no case to exceed such scale.

Rule 36. All costs shall be taxed by the Clerk of the Court.

Rule 37. No warrant of execution or commitment shall be executed after the expiration of two calendar months from the date thereof.

Rule 38. Every summons for a party to appear to be examined upon oath, pursuant to the 98th section of the said act, shall be served not less than three clear days before the day on which the party is required to appear to such summons: provided always, that service of such summons at any time before the time appointed for the appearance of such party may be deemed by the judge to be good service, if it shall be proved to his satisfaction that such party was about to remove out of the jurisdiction of the Court.

Rule 39. Where any claim shall be made to, or in respect of, any goods or chattels taken in execution under the process of any court holden under the authority of the said act, or in respect of the proceeds or value thereof, by any landlord for rent, or by any person not being the party against whom such process has issued, and summonses have been issued on the application of the officer charged with the execution of such process, such summonses shall be served in such time and manner as hereinbefore directed for a summons to appear to a plaint, and the claimant shall be deemed the plaintiff, and the execution-creditor the defendant; and the claimant shall, five clear days before the day on which the summonses are returnable, deliver to the said officer, or leave at the office of the Clerk of the Court, a particular of any goods or chattels alleged to be the property of the claimant, and the grounds of his claim, or, in case of a claim for rent, of the amount thereof, and for what period the same is claimed to be due.

Rule 40. The Clerk of every court shall keep the several books, and in the form in the schedule.

Rule 41. Every entry in such books shall have a number prefixed, corresponding with the number of the plaint to which it refers.

Rule 42. The Clerk of every court shall have an office at each place where the court of which he is clerk is held.

Rule 43. All matters or things required to be done by the Clerk of the Court may be done by the Clerk of the Court, or by the assistant clerk or clerks provided by him.

Rule 44. The office of the Clerk shall be open daily, and the office hours shall be from ten o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon.

Rule 45. At every court, or at such other times as the judge shall require, the high bailiff shall deliver a statement or return, pursuant to the form in the schedule, of what shall have been done since his last return under every process of execution or commitment, which he shall have been required to execute.

Rule 46. Eight days before the day of the holding of the court, the high bailiff shall deliver to the Clerk of the Court a list of all summonses to appear which shall have been served, and the Clerk shall forthwith stick up such list in his office.

Rule 47. Every high bailiff required to execute any warrant of execution or commitment issuing out of any other court, shall make a return to such last-mentioned court forthwith on the execution thereof; and if he shall not have executed such warrant, he shall return the same at the expiration of two calendar months from the date thereof.

Rule 48. Every bailiff levying or receiving any money by virtue of any process issuing out of the court of which he is bailiff, shall, within three days after the receipt thereof, pay over the same to the Clerk of such court.

Rule 49. If any high bailiff shall have levied or received any money under any process issuing out of any other court, he shall, within three days from the receipt thereof, pay over such money, retaining the fees for execution thereof, to the high bailiff of such last-mentioned court.

Rule 50. No summons, notice, order, or other process shall be served on Sunday, Christmas-day, or Good Friday; but such days shall be counted in the computation of the time required by these Rules, unless any of such days shall be the last day of such time, in which case it shall be excluded from such computation.

Rule 51. In case of proceedings not provided for by the forms in the schedule, the Clerk of the Court shall issue the necessary process, using, where practicable, the forms prescribed in the schedule as guides in framing the same.

Rule 52. Wherever the singular number is used in these Rules in reference to persons or things, it shall be understood, when necessary to give full effect to the Rule, to mean several persons or things; and every word importing the masculine gender shall in like manner, when necessary, be understood to include the feminine gender.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

In addition to Assurances on Healthy Lives, this Society continues to grant Policies on the Lives of Persons subject to Gout, Asthma, Rupture, and other Diseases, by their paying a Premium in proportion to the increased risk. The plan of granting Assurances on Unhealthy Lives originated with this Office in the beginning of 1834.

Every Description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons, in any Station, and of all Ages.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged £22 per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third averaged £28 per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than £36 per Cent.; and the future Bonuses are almost certain to exceed that amount.

The Fund accumulated and invested for the Security and Benefit of the Assured, already amounts to £639,797: and the Income, which is steadily increasing, is now upwards of £116,000 per Annum.

LONDON, MARCH 13, 1847.

THE following is a summary of the material enactments proposed by the bill, brought in by Lord Brougham, to amend the law and practice in bankruptcy and insolvency.

It commences by repealing the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, so far, as to the latter only, as it relates to insolvency and insolvent debtors; and all power, jurisdiction, and authority given by those two acts, or by the rules and orders made in pursuance thereof, to the Court of Bankruptcy and to the commissioners and district commissioners thereof in matters of insolvency, are to be repealed, saving petitions now in dependence under those acts.

By the 3rd section, the judges of the county courts and the commissioners of the Insolvent Debtors Court are to have jurisdiction in all matters of insolvency.

By the 5th section, the Court of Review is abolished, and in lieu of it a jurisdiction as a court of record is given to each of the commissioners in bankruptcy, who are to have original jurisdiction in all matters heretofore within the province of such Court of Review or judges respectively.

Instead of an appeal from the commissioners to the Court of Review, there is to be an appeal from the commissioners to the Lord Chancellor, in the same manner that appeals are now made from decisions of the Court of Review, except as to the allowance or suspension of a bankrupt's certificate; and on that point the decision of the commissioner is to be final; and these appeals are to be heard by the Lord Chancellor or one of the Vice-Chancellors.

The number of London commissioners is to be reduced to three, as vacancies occur, and the number of country commissioners, to nine.

The office of chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy is to be abolished, and his duties are to be transferred to the "Master of the Court."

Provisions are made by the 17th and 18th sections for the reduction of the London and country commissioners.

The bill contains many other clauses, all subservient to the main purpose of it, which is to abolish the Court of Review, to diminish the number and increase the authority and power of the commissioners in bankruptcy, and to restore to the Lord Chancellor and the Vice-Chancellors that appeal directly from the commissioners, which it was the great aim of the noble and learned author of this bill some years ago to take from them.

We are not of those who have considered it a duty, ever since Lord Brougham was Chancellor, to cavil at every attempt that he makes in the direction of legal reform. But, at the same time, we cannot shut our eyes to the singularity of the fact, that it should be the same individual who, fourteen years ago, created a magnificent court of bankruptcy judges, when nobody wanted such a court; and who now destroys his own creation when, in its present state, nobody is dissatisfied with it; for it is not of the Court of Review that persons most interested in the management of bankruptcy business complain, but of the ill-arranged mingling of bankruptcy and insolvency business in the courts of the commissioners, producing a sort of nondescript jurisdiction which is neither in bankruptcy nor in insolvency, but has a little of one and a little of the other.

The effect of this bill, if passed into an act, will be, if we understand the 5th section rightly, to give to every commissioner the same jurisdiction which the Court of Review now has; and as, by the Act 2 Will. 4, c. 56, the Court of Review has, subject to a few exceptions, the same jurisdiction in bankruptcy that the Lord Chancellor had before that act, it follows that we shall, under the new dispensation, have twelve little bankruptcy chancellors. How twelve such courts, with co-ordinate jurisdiction; and but little intercommunication, will keep the law of the Court in a state of purity, undebled by conflict of decision, is somewhat of a puzzle to those who observe, that, even in the superior courts, particularly in the four assistant courts of equity, presided over by men of great eminence, sitting within hearing, as it were, of each other, with the same Bar, and the utmost facility of intercommunications, there is still enough of conflict of decision, more particularly in matters of practice, to cause much inconvenience to suitors.

It is true, there is to be an appeal from the commissioners to the Lord Chancellor or to one of the Vice-Chancellors; but such appeal will probably be allowed to any Vice-Chancellor, at the pleasure of the suitor: so that one of these two results will take place—either one of the Vice-Chancellors' Courts will become the pet court of appeal in bankruptcy, in which case it will be but a Court of Review with another name; or else the appeals will be taken into all the Vice-Chancellors' Courts, and then there will be, in fact, an appeal from many to many; in other words, the corrective of conflict of decision, will be an appeal to courts themselves obnoxious to the same judicial infirmity.

We confess we do not see the advantages that are to result from the proposed measure. The business done by the Court of Review is of not very large amount, but is of a class that requires the learning and the weight of a superior judge. It is at present transacted, as all superior business ought to be, by a single judge, and it is well transacted. Subdivided among twelve commissioners, the amount of superior business will be, if we may use so homely an expression, such a mere mouthful to each, that it will scarcely give him a taste of law. And lost and buried as the commissioners are, and must be, from the very nature of the great mass of their business, in a multiplicity of details, partaking as much of the business of an accountant as of that of a lawyer, it will be a marvel if they do not, as judges of courts of record,—as judges with a jurisdiction equal to that which was once wielded by an Eldon,—sink beneath the weight of their new honours, and, in the rare exercise of their functions as chiefs in bankruptcy, find little but shame and disappointment.

The appeal, too, which is to be given to the Lord Chancellor or one of the Vice-Chancellors, is not a general appeal, but only an appeal in the same manner as appeals are now made from decisions of the Court of Review.

Now, without stooping to minute criticism of words, and assuming, that, by saying that appeals may be made "in such manner," it is not merely the form and mode of appealing that are pointed at, but that it is meant that such appeals, or appeals to the same extent, may be made, as are now made from the Court of Review, it will be recollected that appeals cannot be made from the Court of Review except on matters of law or equity, including in these matters of practice, and that appeals on matters of fact are excluded. This may be well, when matters of fact may first be sifted before an inferior tribunal—the commissioners, and then before a first court of appeal, being a superior court. But it is very different where there is to be but one adjudication upon facts, and that before courts which are not made superior courts merely because they are made courts of record.

On the whole, we are satisfied that there is much in this bill to which the attention of the very eminent person whose name it bears cannot have been called, and which will receive revision from him whenever it really comes under his serious consideration*.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

If justices in sessions or out of sessions, from a mistake of the law, refuse to do some act which by law they ought to do, the Court of Queen's Bench, upon application, will, in the first instance, grant a rule to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue, and, if no sufficient cause be shewn, the writ will be directed to issue accordingly†. Therefore, a mandamus lies to justices of the peace to oblige them to admit a person to take the oath of allegiance and to subscribe according to the act of toleration, in order to qualify him to teach a dissenting congregation. (Peat's case, 6 Mod. 310; S. C., 2 Salk. 572; Res v. The Justices of Gloucestershire, 15 East, 577; Res v. The Justices of Suffolk, Id. 590). The Court refused to grant the writ where he was not qualified according to the act, or to take security not to become chargeable to the parish. (6 Mod. 229; but see Colefitt v. Newcomb, 2 Ld. Raym. 1206). So to register and certify a dissenting meeting-house. (Res v. The Justices of Derby, 4 Burr. 1991). It also lies to compel them to appoint overseers, although the time nominated in the statute has expired, because statutes for the relief of the poor are to be construed liberally: (Res v. The Inhabitants of Rufford, 1 Str. 512; Res v. The Inhabitants of Welbeck, M., 14 Geo. 2, B. R., cited by Wilmot, J., in Res v. Showler, 3 Burr. 1303; Res v. The Justices of Westmoreland, 1 Wils. 138; Res v. Horton, 1 T. R. 374; Res v. Beeding, Cald. 92; Res v. Watson, 7 East, 214; Res v. The Justices of Bedfordshire, Cald. 157; Res v. The Justices of Peterborough, Id. 288; Res v. Sparrow, 2 Str. 1123): to swear overseers to their accounts: (Res v. The Justices of Middlesex, 1 Wils. 125, 17 Geo. 2, c. 38): to examine the mother of a bastard and grant a summons against the putative father: (Res v. Martyr and Fulham, 13 East, 55; R. v. Codd, 9 Adol. & Ell. 682): to hear and decide upon a charge of vagrancy instituted by the overseer: (Res v. The Justices of Cumberland, 4 Adol. & Ell. 695): to make and allow a rate: (Ledstone v. The Corporation of Ender, 9 Will. 3, fol. 18; Res v. Barnstable, 1 Bott. pl. 374; Res v. Gadely, 1 N. & P. 572; Res v. The Overseers of Edlston, 1 N. & P. 20). Though the Court will award a mandamus to make a rate, they will not grant a mandamus to make an "equal" rate, the remedy for which is by appeal to the sessions, and not by mandamus. (R. v. Barnstable, 1 Barn. 137; R. v. Canter-

* Since this paper went to press the bill has been withdrawn by Lord Brougham, and an amended bill has been substituted for it. We have not yet seen the amended bill, but as we presume its principle will be the same as that of the bill above commented upon, and as our observations are addressed to principle rather than detail, we shall leave them subsisting.—Ed.

† An exception prevails, however, in some cases, with regard to a rule to shew cause being granted; for instance, in the case of an application to justices to allow a poor-rate, the rule is absolute in the first instance. (Reg. v. Lord Godolphin, 13 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 57).

bury, 4 Burr. 2290). The 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 93, s. 1, enacts, "That no rate for the relief of the poor in England and Wales shall be allowed by any justices which shall not be made upon an estimate of the net annual value of the several hereditaments rated thereunto in the manner pointed out by the act." Notwithstanding the statute, the allowance is a mere ministerial act on the part of the justices; therefore, where a poor-rate was made by two overseers, and there were also two churchwardens in the parish, and the justices refused to allow it, as it was not made or signed by a majority, the Court awarded a mandamus to compel them: (Reg. v. Lord Godolphin, 13 Law Journ., M. C., 57; see also Reg. v. The Earl of Yarborough, 12 Adol. & Ell. 416); and in this sort of case they will grant the mandamus in the first instance without a rule to shew cause, for otherwise the poor might starve: (Reg. v. Lord Godolphin, 13 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 57; Reg. v. Fisher, Say, 160; Reg. v. The Justices of Dorchester, 1 Str. 393; and see Reg. v. Folly, Bott, pl. 16; Reg. v. Edwards and Another, T. T., 7 Geo. 3, 1 Black. 637; in this latter case, the defendants, justices of the peace, kept out of the way to avoid signing the rate, in pursuance of the command of the writ; an attachment was granted for a contempt). To make a rate in aid: (Reg. v. Holbeche, 4 T. R. 778; Dimchroch v. Eastchurch, Salk. 491; St. Peter and St. Paul, Marlborough, 2 Str. 1114; Reg. v. St. Mary, Marlborough, 2 Shaw's Just. 47; 16 Vin. Abr. 416); to sign a poor-rate: (Reg. v. Beecher, 8 Mod. 336; Reg. v. Anon., Comb. 479; Reg. v. Edwards, ubi sup.); to assess personal property: (Reg. v. The Justices of Canterbury, 1 Bott, 131, pl. 162; Reg. v. Whitney, Id., pl. 165; Reg. v. Barking, 2 Ld. Raym. 1280; Reg. v. Ambleside, 16 East. 380; Reg. v. Darlington, 6 T. R. 468; Reg. v. White, 4 T. R. 774; 1 Nol. P. L. 165); to make a warrant of distress for a poor-rate: (St. Luke v. The Justices of Middlesex, 1 Wils. 133; Reg. v. Beam, 6 T. R. 198; Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 272; Anon., 2 Chit. 217). Nevertheless, if any valid doubt were entertained with regard to the validity of the rate or the liability of the party, the Court would not formerly grant a mandamus for making a warrant of distress for levying a poor-rate, lest by so doing the justices might thereby be rendered liable to an action. (Weaver v. Price, 3 B. & Adol. 409; see Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 12 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 36). But now, however, the Court will probably be less scrupulous in granting the writ; for, by a recent statute, (6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 3), it is enacted, that no action, suit, or any other proceeding, shall be commenced or prosecuted against any person or persons whatsoever for or by reason of anything done in obedience to any peremptory mandamus, issued by any Court having authority to issue writs of mandamus. Notwithstanding this section, (3), the Court will not, if there be any doubt as to the issuing of the writ of mandamus, direct it to issue, merely in order that the justices may make a return, instead of obeying it in the first instance, for the sake of obtaining the protection given by the statute on the issuing of a peremptory mandamus; (Reg. v. The Earl of Dartmouth, 5 Q. B. Rep. 878); and where a mandamus is so issued, the justices ought not to make a return, but obey the writ. Also to summon a person for not paying the poor-rates: (Anon., 2 Chit. 257); to proceed against a quaker for a church-rate: (Reg. v. Freeman, 2 Ld. Keny. 19); to make a distress for a poor-rate assessed upon a bishop: (Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 2 Ld. Keny. 163); to make a warrant to levy the balance remaining in the late overseer's hands: (Reg. v. Pascol, 2 M. & S. 343; Reg. v. The Justices of Somersetshire, 2 Stra. 992; 2 Sess. Cas. 283, pl. 174; vide 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, 4; 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 3; Reg. v. The Justices of Manchester, 1 D. & Ry. 464; and see R. v. The Justices of Worcesterhire, 3 D. & R. 299); to receive the complaint of the overseers upon refusal of the late overseers to pay the amount disallowed in his accounts: (Reg. v. Carter, 4 T. R. 246; vide cases in last note). And, where two justices refused to enforce payment of a balance due by the late overseer of the poor, conceiving that they had no authority to do so, as an appeal had been made to the sessions against the overseer's accounts, it appearing that, although the sessions disallowed certain items in the account, they made no order to pay over the balance; the Court, however, on application, thought that the justices had jurisdiction, and granted a mandamus commanding them to receive and hear the complaint. (Reg. v. Carter, ubi supra). To appoint and swear a surveyor of the high-ways: (Reg. v. The Justices of Denbighshire, 4 East, 142; Reg. v. Dr. Pettisward, 4 Burr. 2462); to reimburse a surveyor the monies expended by him: (Hassell's case, 1 Stra. 211); to take security on articles of the peace: (Reg. v. Lewis, 2 Stra. 836; S. C., 2 Sess. Cas. 68, pl. 72); to proceed to judgment on an information of a seizure of exciseable articles: (Reg. v. Todd, 1 Stra. 590); to back a warrant for distress: (Reg. v. Kynaston, 1 East, 117); to the mayor and aldermen of London to give judgment on the assessment of a jury, who had been impannelled to award compensation to the owners of land taken for the erection of a market, under an act of Parliament: (Amburst's case, Ventr. 187; Bac. Abr., "Mandamus," (D.)); to appoint overseers of the poor: (Reg. v. The Justices of Worcesterhire, 11 Adol. & Ell. 57; S. P., Reg. v. The Justices of Peterborough, Cald. 238). It must be expressly sworn that the place in question actually is, or is reputed to be, a vill, to set out on the record of a conviction on the Building Act, (3 Geo. 4, c. 23), the evidence adduced on the hearing of the information. (In re Rix and another, 4 D. & R. 352; and see 3 Geo. 4, c. 23; 14 Geo. 3, c. 78; Reg. v. Marsh, 4 D. & R. 260; but see R. v. The Justices of Staffordshire, 6 Adol. & Ell. 84, and R. v. The Justices of Nottingham, 3 Adol. & Ell. 500; semble contra.) Where a railway act, (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 106), incorporating the Eastern Counties Railway Company, enacted, (sect. 36), that the company should not be obliged, nor any jury under the act allowed, to receive or take notice of any complaint for any loss or injury sustained in consequence of the execution of the powers of the act, unless notice in writing were given by the complainant to the company within six months after the time of such loss or injury; and that, in case of differences (sect. 41) between the company and owners, &c. of property, as to the amount of damage done thereto by the company under the powers of the act, the same should (when the claim did not exceed 20*l.*) be determined by two justices; and, by a subsequent act, (1 & 2 Vict. c. 81, s. 42), in all cases of land occupied by the company for temporary purposes, it was enacted, that the compensation for the same should be ascertained in like manner by the justices, whatever might be the amount claimed; it was held, that the notice required by sect. 36 of the first act did not apply to cases before the justices. Therefore, where a justice had dismissed a complaint for want of proof of such notice, the Court granted a mandamus calling upon him to hear and determine the complaint. (Reg. v. Bingham, 4 Q. B. Rep. 877; S. C., 3 Railw. Cas. 390).

THE ELEVENTH EDITION OF SIR E. B. SUGDEN'S PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE LAW OF VENDORS AND PURCHASERS OF ESTATES.

By adopting a smaller type and adding to the fullness of the pages, this Edition has been very considerably reduced in bulk and price. The intrinsic value of the work has not in any way been affected by the alteration in appearance, as the text remains unabridged, while the facility of reference is increased by the consolidation of the former three indexes.

S. Sweet, 1, Chancery-lane, London.

Price 14s. boards.

PRINCIPLES OF THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSHUA WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A Work which no Common-law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupillage."—Warren's Law Studies, pp. 586, 768.

"The want which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Descents, published in 1837) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think, that, in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. . . . It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

Price 1s. 6d. sewed.

REMARKS ON THE ACTS OF THE SESSION 8 & 9 VICTORIA relating to REAL PROPERTY; with an Answer to the Question "Whether Assignments of Terms ought still to be assigned to Trustees for Purchasers," intended as a SUPPLEMENT to "Principles of the Law of Real Property." Also, the Responsibility and Indemnity of convicting Magistrates and their Officers. With an Appendix of Practical Forms and Precedents of Convictions. Third Edition. By E. E. DEACON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

In addition to Assurances on Healthy Lives, this Society continues to grant Policies on the Lives of Persons subject to Gout, Asthma, Rupture, and other Diseases, by their paying a Premium in proportion to the increased risk. The plan of granting Assurances on Unhealthy Lives originated with this Office in the beginning of 1824.

Every Description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons, in any Station, and of all Ages.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 22 per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third averaged 28 per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 26 per Cent.; and the future Bonuses are almost certain to exceed that amount.

The Fund accumulated and invested for the Security and Benefit of the ASSURED, already amounts to £639,797; and the Income, which is steadily increasing, is now upwards of £116,000 per Annum.

LONDON, MARCH 20, 1847.

A DOUBT has been lately suggested, in the Courts of at least two of the Commissioners in Bankruptcy, whether the stats. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, are applicable to the case of insolvents wholly without assets. The doubt has been attempted to be met by the observation, that, if those statutes do not so apply, the Commissioners of Bankruptcy have been erroneously administering the law for years, and that, in point of fact, it is precisely insolvents without assets who require the protection of these statutes. The first of these observations can have no weight whatever, as it amounts to no more than that the Commissioners have mistaken the law, which, if true, would be no reason for declaring the law to be in conformity with their mistake. The second may have some weight as an argument, ab inconvenienti, if it shall be found that the statutes are really ambiguous; but the general rule must of course be followed in this as in all other cases of construction, of finding the meaning of the statutes in the statutes themselves, having regard to the subject-matter on which they operate.

The question is, then, is there really much doubt about the construction of the statutes, and particularly of the 5 & 6 Vict., in which originates the particular jurisdiction in question? The preamble of that statute is expressed thus: "Whereas it is expedient to protect from all process against the person, such persons as have become indebted without any fraud, or gross or culpable negligence, so as, nevertheless, their estates may be duly distributed among their creditors. Be it enacted," &c.

The debtor is then to file a petition, in which he is to state his debts, and also the nature and amount of his property, and of the debts owing to him, &c.; in a word, of his property and rights to property.

The commissioner is to examine him, and if he finds that his debts were not improperly contracted, and particularly that they were not contracted "without having at the time of becoming indebted reasonable assurance of being able to pay the debts," and if the commissioner finds that the debtor has made a full discovery of his estate, effects, debts, and credits, then the commissioner may deal with him under the statute.

On the passing of the final order, the petitioner's present and future estate is, by the 7th section, to vest in the assignees. This act prescribes no specific form of statement by the petitioner as to his debts and assets.

The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, does not touch, and being only an amending and extending statute, in fact adopts the preamble of the 5 & 6 Vict.; but it does prescribe a specific form of petition, which it requires to be supported by an affidavit; and that form of petition contains, among other allegations, "That your petitioner has not parted with or charged any of his property (with certain exceptions) at any time within three months of the date of filing this his petition, or at any time with a view to this petition.

"That your petitioner is desirous that his estate should be administered under the protection and direction of this honourable Court; and that he verily believes such estate is of the value of £— at the least, unincumbered, &c.; and that the same is available for the benefit of his creditors."

The almost absurdity of the doctrine, that the acts were meant to apply to persons wholly without assets, might perhaps be best detected by really considering a petition drawn in conformity with that state of things, recollecting that, as the petitioner's estate = 0, 0 may be substituted in the petition, wherever the petitioner's estate is referred to. Thus—

Your petitioner is desirous that 0 should be administered under the protection of the court, and he verily believes 0 is of the value of 0 £. (This portion of the petition would at least have the merit of possessing internal arithmetical evidence of its truth). The next allegation would be, "And that the same (that is, nothing) is available for the benefit of his creditors."

There is, in the petition, a form for a special proposal on the part of the debtor to his creditors, with a note to this effect,—"Omit this paragraph if no special proposal." But there is not a hint of any alteration in the preceding allegation to meet the case of the estate being = nil.

The consideration of the frame of the parliamentary petition would, therefore, of itself suggest the extreme improbability that the statute of 7 & 8 Vict. was intended to apply to the case of a person absolutely without assets. But, if the effect of the preamble of the 5 & 6 Vict. and the whole scope of both the acts be considered, we apprehend the conclusion is almost irresistible, that they never were intended to apply except to those cases where there is some estate.

The preamble of the 5 & 6 Vict. is in the form of a condition. It recites that it is expedient to protect the person, so as the estate may be distributed. How can it be supposed from these words, that the Legislature meant to protect the person against the creditors, except conditionally upon some estate being forthcoming for them? But the preamble goes further: it recites the necessity of protecting the person only where there has been in the debtor no fraud, or gross or culpable negligence. Now, it is clear that a person may become insolvent, that is, unable to pay fully, without either of these faults. But how is it possible for a man to have brought himself to have literally and absolutely nothing, without at least culpable negligence? Some, at least, of his debts must, under such circumstances, have been incurred with the full and unavoidable knowledge that he had no reasonable assurance of being able to pay them; and, if so, there is gross and culpable negligence, as we submit, within the meaning of the preamble; and more, the case falls within the express words of the 4th section of the act, by which the commissioner has no jurisdiction to make an order for final protection, if he finds, among other things, that the petitioner became indebted without a reasonable assurance, at the time of becoming so, of his being able to pay his debts.

It is observable, too, that throughout the 5 & 6 Vict. and 7 & 8 Vict. there is not one clause or one word which directly or indirectly alludes to the case of a person petitioning who shall have no assets whatever; not even in the clauses prescribing how the petitioner's property is to be dealt with; clauses in reference to which, the absurdity of providing for the vesting and management of a nullity, could not have escaped the notice of those who framed them; clauses, therefore, which (proceeding upon the usual rule of construction, that the Legislature knows what it pens, and does not advisedly pen nonsense) must be assumed not to be intended to apply to the case of the petitioner's assets being nil.

Upon examination of the acts, the case will, we think, be found to stand thus: that their general object is to protect the person of a debtor, on condition of his giving up his estate to his creditors; that, in the absence of express intimation of intention, such an object is inconsistent with the idea of protecting the person when there is no consideration moving from the debtor to the creditor; that not only there is no such expressed intention in the acts, but one half of each of the acts, and the forms prescribed by the more recent one, would be meaningless or absurd, if they were held to apply to the case of an insolvent wholly without assets*; that such a construction of the act would demonstrably do violence to the requisition, that a debtor shall not have been guilty of gross negligence in incurring his debts; and lastly, that the common sense of the thing is, that the Legislature never could have intended to protect men who choose to go on incurring debts up to the expenditure of their very last shilling; and that to suppose it to have so intended, is to suppose it to have intended to afford facilities for recklessness and dishonesty. We conclude, that the better opinion is that according to which it has been thought, that, under the acts above discussed, the commissioners have no jurisdiction where there are no assets.

A Practical Treatise on the Law of Partnership, including the Law relating to Joint-stock Companies; with an Appendix of Precedents, Forms, and Statutes. By ANDREW BISSET, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., Barrister at Law.—8vo., pp. 668. [Stevens & Norton.]

Mr. Bisset has earned a sound, if not an extensive, reputation by his very learned work on estates for life, published in 1842. In the work before us, he has treated a subject of much more practical and general interest with equal ability and success; and he has done this in a singularly small space, yet with no sacrifice of perspicuity or completeness. Indeed, we should not have believed, had we not witnessed the success of the experiment, that the law of partnership could be thoroughly expounded within the compass of 176 pages, which is the extent of the first part of the work, devoted to the law of ordinary partnerships.

As a specimen of the succinctness of our author's style, which, to give it the highest praise that a text writer can desire, reminds us of "The Compendium of the Law of Real Property," we extract the first four paragraphs of the book, omitting the references to the authorities:—

First. "At the common law the bare consent of the parties is sufficient to constitute a partnership, whether such consent be signified by written or parol contract, or by acts.

Secondly. "The consent of the parties, or delectus persone, as it is called, being essentially necessary to the constitution of a partnership, a partner cannot, without the consent of his copartners, introduce a stranger into the concern as a partner; and even the executors and representatives of partners do not, in their representative capacity, succeed to the condition of partners.

Thirdly. "The essence of the contract of partnership, like that of other contracts, consisting in consent, it follows as a general rule that no person incapable of giving his consent is capable of entering into a contract of partnership. An infant, however, may, by law, be a partner, and be entitled to all the benefits resulting from the partnership, though he will not be liable for the losses if he chooses to take advantage of his infancy, and avoid the contract when he comes of age; but, in order to do this, he must notify his disaffirmance of the partnership on coming of age. An alien friend may be a partner, but not an alien enemy, unless residing here under the King's protection; nor a British subject nor a neutral domiciled in a foreign country at war with this country, unless for purposes of trade licensed by the government of this country. Married women are legally incapable of entering into the contract of partnership. Where it happens that they are entitled to shares in banking houses and other mercantile concerns, under positive covenants, their husbands are entitled to such shares, and become partners in their stead. By the custom of London, a feme covert carrying on trade in the city of London without the interference of her husband is considered in the city courts as a sole trader, though she cannot sue as such in the courts at Westminster; and thence it has been inferred that she may be a partner in that city.

* It is surely not too strong to say, that, to make the Legislature put it in the mouth of a debtor to swear gravely, that a quantity equal to 0 is available for the benefit of his creditors, is to make the Legislature vicariously talk nonsense.

Fourthly. "Partnerships are not confined to commerce, strictly so called. 'Although there may be partnerships in many other instances besides what are merely commercial, as in the case of farms rented by several persons jointly, and of partnerships of attorneys and the like; yet I think the true criterion is, as stated by Mr. J. Blackstone in the case of Grace v. Smith, whether they are concerned in profit and loss; and the same doctrine is in effect held by Chief Justice De Grey in that case.' Per Gould, J., 1 H. Bl. 43. On this subject Mr. Collyer says, 'Perhaps it may be laid down generally that a partnership may exist in any business or transaction which is not a mere personal office, and for the performance of which payment may be enforced.'

"It is certain that there are some associations not engaged in trade, and consequently not concerned in profit and loss, which, not having a corporate character, are dealt with in a court of equity as ordinary partnerships, as, a society for relief of the members in sickness, &c. Clubs, too, not constituted for any purposes of profit have been held to be subject to liabilities similar to those of a partnership."

The last position in the above extract requires qualification, as, indeed, the author has shewn in a subsequent page. Since the cases of Fleming v. Hector (2 Mee. & W. 172) and Todd v. Bony (8 Mee. & W. 505) it would be more correct to compare the liabilities of members of clubs to the liabilities of principals for the acts of their agents, than to the liabilities of partners. We should rather adopt the distinction taken in 7 Jarm. Conv., 3rd ed., p. 2:—

"There seems to be a distinction between trading associations, properly so called, and associations of which the end is not pecuniary profit. Participation in the profit of a joint adventure is a circumstance which constitutes a partnership by its own force, without any agreement between the parties, and (as to third persons) even notwithstanding an express agreement to the contrary. But where the object of the association is not pecuniary profit, it seems that the liability of each individual as partner will depend entirely upon the terms of the agreement between him and his associates, and his own behaviour to third persons: in fact, these must be regarded as cases of agency rather than of partnership."

So, although a benefit club is said to be treated as a partnership in equity, (Beaumont v. Meredith, 3 Ves. & B. 180), this is merely intended to express, that the remedies, inter se, of the members, with respect to accounts, &c., are similar to those of partners. But the members of such a club are not necessarily or usually liable for each other as partners to third persons.

The work is divided into two parts, the first treating of ordinary partnership, and the second of joint-stock companies. Part I is divided into eight chapters, treating successively of—1. What constitutes a partnership; 2. The interest of partners in partnership property; 3. The powers of one partner to bind the firm, and the consequent liabilities of his co-partners; 4. The causes of the dissolution of partnership; 5. The consequences of the dissolution; 6. The legal remedies between, by, and against partners; 7. Equitable remedies between, by, and against partners; and 8. Deeds of partnership, and their construction. The subjects of the chapters in Part II are—1. Joint-stock companies before the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110; 2. Joint-stock companies within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, not requiring the authority of Parliament; 3. Railway and other joint-stock companies requiring the authority of Parliament, within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, for some purposes, but not for others, and herein of such companies both before and after incorporation, and of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act; 4. Banking companies before and since the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112; 5. Dissolution of joint-stock companies, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, and under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28; 6. What constitutes a partnership in these companies, and herein of the liability of shareholders, of promoters or provisional directors, and of the company, respectively; 7. Legal remedies affecting joint-stock companies, their individual members and strangers; 8. Suits in equity between joint-stock companies and strangers; 9. Suits in equity among the shareholders of joint-stock companies.

Upon the puzzling question, as to what kind and degree of participation in profits is necessary to render the participator liable as a partner, Mr. Bisset has some judicious observations, which greatly lessen, if they do not remove, the difficulties presented by the authorities, especially by the celebrated judgment of the great cloud-compelling Chancellor, in Ex parte Hamper, (17 Ves. 403).

"The difficulty has been long felt and acknowledged. Lord Eldon, attempting to give a general expression for the precise degree and kind of participation of profit which should constitute partnership liability, laid down a distinction, which has appeared to some a distinction without a difference, so subtle and refined, (to borrow the epithets which some writers have applied to it), couched in language so obscure and ambiguous, that it is difficult to meet with any ordinarily clear-headed man who even professes to understand it." [We believe that most clear-headed men now understand Lord Eldon himself much better than they understand his sayings.] "His Lordship's dicta, too, though expressed as if they were the result of cases previously decided, do not seem, as Mr. Collyer has justly observed, to have been warranted by any express decision anterior to his Lordship's own judgments." After citing the judgment in Ex parte Hamper, and some of the comments on it, Mr. Bisset proceeds:—

"If the matter were res integra, a plain and intelligible rule, and one, too, which would not be at variance with anything in the cases decided previously to Ex parte Hamper, would be, that those whose shares of the returns of the business or adventure consisted wholly of the profits of stocks, or partly of the profits of stock and partly of the wages of labour, should be held liable as partners, but that those whose share of the said returns consisted wholly of the wages of labour, or the interest of money lent, or a certain fixed annuity, and who had no control or voice, as principals, in the management of the business or adventure, should not be held liable as partners. This would provide for all those cases in which agents or servants, for the purpose of stimulating their exertions, are paid, not by a fixed sum, but by a certain

'proportion of the profits, or, to speak more accurately, of the returns of the business or adventure. Of course, it is not meant to apply to those cases where a party, although not interested in the capital stock, or even in the profits, suffers himself to be held out to the world as a partner; nor to those cases where it is the intention that the party, though not interested in the capital stock, should, nevertheless, exercise the control of a principal in the business or adventure, and, in short, fill the character of partner to all intents and purposes. Nor would this rule be altogether inconsistent and irreconcilable with Lord Eldon's dictum, cited above: on the contrary, would it not tend to throw light on his expression so much criticised,—'a specific interest in the profits themselves as profits,' by marking the distinction between that portion of the gross returns or earnings of a business which comes strictly under the head of 'wages of labour,' and that portion which comes under the head of 'profits of stock,' strictly so called?

"It is true, that, in his second statement of the distinction, Lord Eldon expressly includes, among the cases of liability to third persons, the case, in certain circumstances, of a person having no property in the capital. But, as we have shewn, and will shew further hereafter, there are many cases of exception to the general rule we have stated."

In treating of the conversion of real property used for partnership purposes, Mr. Bisset gives us the following important information with regard to the case of Phillips v. Phillips:—

"In the published report of this case of Phillips, in 1 My. & K. 649, the only point that appears as determined is, that real estate purchased with partnership capital for partnership purposes is personal estate, and, as such, goes to the personal representative of a deceased partner. But it appears from the MS. notes of Mr. Williamson, one of the counsel for the plaintiffs in that case, which are now before me, that the following important points were also determined:—(1). Public houses devised by the uncle, who was a brewer, to the two nephews, who carried on the brewery as partners, were held not to be partnership property, though they were used exactly as the former. The defendants, on attempting to argue this, were stopped by the Master of the Rolls. (2). So, where the uncle had mortgages of public-houses, whether in fee or for years, which he devised to his nephews, and the nephews purchased the equity of redemption out of partnership funds, the equity of redemption was held to follow the mortgage, and not to become partnership property."

The above cited note of Phillips v. Phillips is not sufficiently explicit as to the second point mentioned in it,—for it does not appear whether the mortgaged property was used in the partnership business, and if used, when that user commenced, and, if it commenced before the purchase, whether any account of interest, or of occupation-rent in lieu of interest, appeared in the partnership books. If the premises were never used in the business, the decision was free from difficulty, for the purchase, though made with partnership funds, was not made for partnership purposes; but if they were used in the business, whether that user commenced at the time of the purchase or before, then, being purchased for partnership purposes and with partnership funds, they became partnership property. In either case, to say that the equity of redemption followed the mortgage would have been a mere conceit, and an erroneous one, for it is settled, that a mortgagee purchasing the equity of redemption abandons his mortgage, and takes the equity with all its charges. (Toulmin v. Steer, 3 Mer. 210).

From the above report of Phillips v. Phillips, and from the other modern authorities, Mr. Bisset concludes that real estate used for partnership purposes is not to be considered as converted into personalty, unless it was purchased with partnership funds. This is, perhaps, true as a general rule, but even the modern authorities present difficulties which are not easily surmountable. Our space will not allow us to go into a discussion of the point, and we shall content ourselves with referring, in addition to the cases collected by Mr. Bisset, to the dicta of Wigram, V. C., in the case of Dale v. Hamilton, (11 Jur. 163), reported since Mr. Bisset's book appeared.

The second part of the work will be peculiarly acceptable to the profession, who have hitherto been unfurnished with any treatise on the law of joint-stock companies; Mr. Hodges's elaborate work being confined to the subject of railways, and Mr. Wordsworth's book being anything but what it should be. We are glad to observe, that Mr. Bisset does not join in the common abuse of the Joint-stock Companies Registration Act, (7 & 8 Vict. c. 110), abuse which we are inclined to attribute mainly to the distaste of those who utter it for the labour—not alight, we admit—of mastering the numerous and somewhat complicated provisions of this salutary and ably drawn measure. But, on the "Act to facilitate the Dissolution of certain Railway Companies," (9 & 10 Vict. c. 28), our author has some just strictures, with which we shall conclude this notice. After stating the provisions, that, if the company shall not be dissolved upon the footing of a bankruptcy, its affairs "shall be wound up according to the rules applicable to the dissolution of partnership undertakings, and as if the undertaking had been dissolved by mutual consent," he proceeds:—

"That is, the affairs of the company are to be wound up according to the rules for the winding up of the affairs of an ordinary partnership concern. But what are those rules? Lord Eldon, in one of his most elaborate judgments, already cited, declared that he believed it would be 'very difficult to lay down any general rule on the subject.' His Lordship thence inferred, that 'nothing can be more mischievous to persons engaged in commercial transactions than not to take care to settle by deed, when they enter into partnership, all the questions which may arise under the various cases that may probably occur every day, when those partnerships come to a conclusion.' And again, in a further stage of the same case, 'I cannot forbear intimating once more, that commercial men, when entering into partnerships, should advert to the necessity of providing by express covenants in what manner the affairs of the partnership are to be wound up with reference to their respective interests, whenever there shall be what may be called, but what is not in effect, an end of the partnership.' And again, 'after a very anxious consideration of this subject, I believe that it will be found, that the rule, which is to be applied, must be deduced in almost every case from the particular circumstances of that very case.' Which amounts, in fact, to saying that there is no rule generally applicable to the dissolution of even ordinary partnerships. A fortiori there is none applicable to the case of such unmanageable concerns as these joint-stock railway partnerships. According to Lord Eldon, the want is to be supplied by special provisions in the partnership-deed,—or, in the cases of large companies, in the deed of settlement. But, in the cases in question, the companies exist mostly or only under parliamentary contracts or subscribers' agreements,—which are not likely to afford much of the assistance required and contemplated by Lord Eldon when he enforces the importance of settling by deed all the questions which may arise under the circumstances to which we allude.

"There being no express provisions in the act and no machinery created for the special purpose of winding up in this case the affairs of the company, it must be inferred to be the intention of the act that the old committee (which may be supposed to have lost somewhat of the confidence of the shareholders or members of the company) are to be intrusted with that extremely difficult office.

"How that committee can be possessed of any capacity for such a purpose, it is very difficult to understand. The 2nd section of the act clearly deprives it, in case of dissolution, of the powers, which by its constitution it acquired, of furthering the original undertaking. If the power of making payments in discharge of liabilities already incurred be implied by the 3rd section, and continue after the question of dissolution is decided in the affirmative, there are yet many powers and authorities which, neither by its original constitution nor by any apparent implication, can be inferred to belong to it. Thus, in authority, so desirable in cases of this nature, to adjust and settle accounts, or to compromise or submit to arbitration disputes with any other company or persons, or even to demand and enforce payment and delivery of monies or other property on behalf of the company, the old committee would seem to be totally deficient; nor are any methods provided by which these highly expedient and even necessary powers may be either directly exercised or conferred on any new committee, person or persons, in the absence of the universal consent of all the persons entitled by the 12th section to be present and vote at any meeting to be called in pursuance of the act."

With reference to dissolution with bankruptcy, the act, after laying down the conditions on which the fiat is to issue, enacts, that, after the issuing of the fiat, the company shall be deemed to be within the provisions of the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111:—

"That is, the company is to be within the provisions of the 'Act for facilitating the winding up of Joint-stock Companies unable to meet their Pecuniary Engagements.' And by the 11th section of that statute, it is enacted, 'that the law and practice in bankruptcy now in force shall extend so far as the same may be applicable to this act, and to fiats in bankruptcy issued by virtue of this act, and to all proceedings under such fiats, save and except as may be otherwise directed by this act.' But if we apply 'the law and practice in bankruptcy' to the case of a bankruptcy on the petition of members of a company or partnership, we shall find both law and practice wholly inapplicable. A most important step in bankruptcy is the choice of the creditors' assignees. But there is no provision in the law and practice of bankruptcy for a choice of partners' or shareholders' assignees; nor, if the law or practice be applied, can the choice of assignees by the creditors be excluded. There must be, therefore, a choice of assignees by the creditors, (who may, on this supposition, have nothing to do with the prosecution of the fiat), and no choice by the shareholders, who are the persons at whose instance the bankruptcy takes place."

Observations on Mr. STRUTT'S Railway Bill.

[Bigg & Son, London.—1847.]

A long time back, the writer of this paper took occasion to observe in the pages of THE JURIST upon the disposition shewn by the government of this country to obtain some influence in the direction of railway affairs, attributing that disposition to a conviction on the part of public men, that the railway interest was then already a powerful interest, capable of being turned to account in the political scale, and was yearly growing in power. Since those observations were written, the Legislature has every year made some step towards the acquisition, for the government of the country, of a power of direction over the railway interest, and many causes have combined to facilitate the advances of the government towards the desired object. Should the absorption of the railway interest into the sphere of government influence be successful, as it very probably will, railway companies will, in some measure, have been themselves accessory to the surrender of their independence. For the feeling in the public mind, on which the claims of the government to the management of railway affairs is based, is, to a great extent, the consequence of ideas inculcated for very different purposes by railway companies themselves. In the beginning of the railway era, when men, unaccustomed to the wholesale interference with private rights, requisite, or at any rate enforced, in carrying the new system into effect, remonstrated and cried aloud at the invasion of their parks and the pulling down of their houses, the companies, in order to enlist on their side the sympathies of the public, strenuously inculcated the doctrine that they were not as other men; that railway companies were public bodies, acting for great public interests, and must not be looked upon or dealt with as common traders seeking to drive a trade with the public for their own profit. They sought to identify themselves with the State for the purpose of crushing private opposition; and they did crush private opposition, and in a great measure by so identifying themselves with the State. But the delusion that they thus created for their own purposes, was too valuable to other bodies not less politic than themselves, to be suffered to die away when it had done their work. The idea that railway concerns are great public interests, and are as it were too ponderous for mere trading management, survives, and still influences the public mind. Hence the public clamour for government protection, whenever a railway accident occurs, or whenever a little railway oppression is brought to light. Hence the numerous attempts at bills to regulate railway concerns, government inspectors, and the like, and last, but not least, the bill brought into Parliament this session by Mr. Strutt, of which we think we may say, that, if it passes into law, the great railway revolution will have fairly begun; and that, before many years shall have passed by, railway concerns will no longer be under the control of those with whose capital they are carried on, but will be brought under a government department, and be managed or mismanaged, as may chance, under the double load of executive and legislative direction.

Mr. Strutt's bill contains two principles; the first, to transfer in effect a great part of the substantial jurisdiction over applications for parliamentary powers, to the board of railway commissioners, who constitute in effect a government department. The second, to interfere in the actual management of the business of established railways. On both points, it appears to us, as it does to the writer whose observations we are about to notice, a most objectionable measure.

The main feature of the first branch of the bill, is the exclusion (as to a large part at least of the inquiry into the grounds on which a company rests its claim to parliamentary powers) of the quasi judicial inquiry of the parliamentary committees, and the substitution of examinations to be directed by the railway commissioners, to be conducted by engineers employed by them, and to be adopted or regulated by them at their discretion, and especially without the assistance of counsel; for counsel appear to be the one thing hateful in the sight of Mr. Strutt. The following is an abstract, taken from the pamphlet before us, of the principal provisions of the first branch of Mr. Strutt's bill:—

"The promoters of a railway are, in the first instance, to publish advertisements in the London Gazette, and in a newspaper published in each of the counties through which the railway is to run, speci“fying the course of the railway, the situation of the termini, and the towns through or near which it is to run.

“They are next to pay into the Bank of England, or secure to the satisfaction of the commissioners, such sum of money as the commissioners shall think fit, not exceeding 500*l.* for each mile of the proposed railway.

“This sum, if paid into the Bank, and not secured, is to be drawn out by the commissioners’ cheques, in payment of the expenses to be incurred under the act, and the balance remaining in the Bank when the bill is passed, or withdrawn, or thrown out, is to be paid to the promoters. The Bank, however, is to be accountable to the commissioners only, and it does not appear that the commissioners are to be in any manner accountable to the promoters, further than for the repayment to them of such balance within one month after the bill is at an end. And upon proof of such publication, and of the payment of the above-mentioned deposit, the commissioners, upon the application of the promoters for that purpose, may grant them a warrant, authorising them to enter and survey the lands through which the railway is proposed to pass. The application for this purpose must be made some time in the year preceding that in which the parliamentary notices are to be published, and the warrant may be limited as to the time of its operation by the commissioners, and, if not so limited, will expire on the 31st March next after its date. The promoters, after notice, may enter to survey. They are to mark out the line by a furrow, or, if required, by stakes, and to shew the levels by posts at convenient distances. The promoters are to make compensation for damage, the amount, in case of dispute, to be determined by the commissioners.

“On the 15th April, after the date of the warrant, or on the fifteenth day after the expiration of the time limited in the warrant, the promoters are to deposit a plan and sections at the office of the commissioners.

“The commissioners, if they think fit, may appoint engineers or other persons of competent skill, to be called their officers, to inspect the line, or any part, whose duty, at such inspection, appears to be confined to receiving information and suggestions from persons interested either as promoters or landowners, and to report to the commissioners.

“The commissioners, after considering such report, may authorise the promoters to alter the line within certain limits, and subject to certain conditions, and may issue a warrant, limited as to time, authorising them to make the necessary surveys.

“On or before the 31st July, the promoters are to deposit the plan and sections on which they intend to rely, and the commissioners are to indorse thereon, or annex thereto, a certificate, that the provisions of the act have been complied with.

“Owners or occupiers, or persons otherwise interested, may propose variations of the line, and, if these are not adopted by the promoters, they may obtain a warrant to survey, and deposit plan and sections on or before the 31st July, or any other time specified in the warrant, and obtain the commissioners’ certificate as to compliance with the provisions of the act.

“Acts for making railways may be amended in the next subsequent session to that in which they were passed; and bills introduced but not carried in one session may be introduced in the next session, upon the deposit of plans and sections on the 31st July, and upon compliance with such of the other proceedings before detailed as the commissioners may not dispense with, and with such proceedings as they may think proper to substitute.

“The commissioners are to publish in the London Gazette a list of the proposed railways not later than the 15th October.

“After the parliamentary deposits of plans and sections have been made, the commissioners may survey or inspect the line by themselves or persons appointed by them.

“Any person may submit to the commissioners (subject to such regulations as they shall establish) objections in writing to the proposed line, or any part, or to any provisions of the bill, or to any provisions of any railway bill, and the commissioners may hear the parties thereon.

“The commissioners and the persons employed by them are to have, for the purposes of such survey, all the powers, and be subject to the liabilities of, the commissioners’ act of last session, and also be entitled to probe and bore to ascertain the nature of the soil.

“The commissioners are to report to Parliament as to the grouping of bills for committees, and to make suggestions for facilitating the examination of bills before Parliament; and are also to report specially on several matters relating to each line similar in most respects to those on which committees on bills have at present to report; and they may, if they think fit, include two or more bills in one report.

“The commissioners may examine into compliance with the Standing Orders, if authorised by either House of Parliament so to do, and may make regulations accordingly, causing such regulations to be printed, and submitting such as have been made since the preceding session to both Houses of Parliament.”

On the exclusion from this scheme of the principle of judicial, and the substitution for it of bureaucratic, investigation, we cannot express our opinion better than in the words of the author of the pamphlet.

“We regret,” he says, “to say that the bill, both in its terms and in its spirit, as explained by Mr. Strutt, is framed on the principle of excluding the judicial investigation, which it has hitherto been the main object of parliamentary legislation to render more and more efficient. In the first place, the local inspectors are to combine the characters of judges and witnesses, by acting, not merely on the statement of the contending parties, but also on their own observation. Their decisions, which will in many cases be conclusive of the fate of the bill, will be founded on a mixture of testimony and private opinion, compounded in no definite proportions, and incapable of being subjected to the test either of evidence or of scientific judgment. If it is shown that the inspecting officer has decided against the weight of evidence, he will fall back on his own individual observation; while, in answer to counter opinions of higher authority, he will shelter himself under the alleged preponderance of evidence in support of his decision. It must be remembered that Mr. Strutt proposes to entrust this arduous responsibility, not to lawyers trained to balance testimony, to analyse the component parts of the reasoning which has led them to a given conclusion, and to distinguish between the statements of others and their own judgments, but to engineers employed by the board, who will on every disputed point be liable to a professional bias, and who are less likely to give due weight to evidence in their own department than they would be if, as jurymen, they had to decide an issue unconnected with their peculiar profession. We may also suggest that they will be liable to the suspicion of another bias. There is little likelihood that any railway will hereafter be projected which does not involve the interests of some of the great existing companies. The inspecting officers must, of course, be so far impartial as not to be connected with any of these companies,—with those directly interested, as parties in the cause,—and, with the others, from the recognised position of alliance or hostility in which each stands to all the rest. All the “railway engineers of the first class are already in the employment of the companies, and must, therefore, be put out of consideration. We are far from thinking that their education or habits of thought qualify even the greatest among them for the office of judges, for the duty of balancing evidence on points on which their own minds are previously made up; far less do we expect that a satisfactory tribunal will be formed out of the profession, after excluding forty or fifty of the ablest of its members. The officers must be selected from young and rising men not yet in railway employment, but all influenced by the laudable ambition of engagements in the service of the companies on whose interests they are to decide. The mere professional ability and energy they possess, the more eager will be their hopes of succeeding in due time to the reigning Brunels and Stephenson; the more certain will it be that they will have a direct tangible interest in conciliating the parties between whom they are to act as judges. They will have no bar to watch them; but the effect of excluding counsel will be more conveniently considered when we speak of the hearing before the board itself.”

And again,—“We are compelled to adopt the only remaining alternative, and to believe that the commissioners have, no doubt from the best motives, but, as we think, most erroneously, attempted, not to secure the means of judicial decision, but to vest in themselves a power of irresponsible administrative action. Mr. Strutt is well aware of the necessity of professional assistance to a judicial tribunal. Either he himself or some other chairman of a sub-committee last year publicly recommended solicitors unacquainted with parliamentary practice to leave their cases in the hands of their agents, without interference, as an advantage to their clients, and a saving of the public time. He certainly would not wish to give any parties an unfair trial; but we fear that he meditates the entire superseding of the trial. After hearing evidence on disputed points of engineering, he proposes, in certain cases, to send down an officer to examine the question on the spot, and to report to the commissioners. We need not say, that his report will almost always be conclusive with the board, and consequently with Parliament. If the best evidence that can be procured by the parties interested still leaves the matter in doubt, it is clear that an official report will turn the scale.”

When we come to the second branch of the new legislative scheme, we find that a multitude of regulations are to be imposed on railway companies, the result of which will be, and is probably intended to be, ultimately to take the virtual management of the business of railways out of the hands of the companies to whom they belong.

Of this, the spirit is happily pointed out by our author in the following passage, with which we shall close our extracts from his well-written pamphlet:—“It would be impossible,” he says, “to discuss in detail all the provisions of the bill respecting the control of railways. The commissioners will have no sin-cere if they enforce half of them; the railway companies no slight need of accurate memories and scrupulous consciences if they obey the unenforced half. Not that all the regulations are in themselves essentially wrong, but the best of them are generally such as a well-conducted company would be disposed to make for itself. Why, then, it may be asked, not make and enforce them by superior authority? The question involves a very considerable assumption; it involves admitting the whole theory of paternal government—repudiated by us in almost all other transactions, introduced in our railway system alone. Foreign governments take care of their people; we prefer, whenever we can, taking care of ourselves. We think we can be trusted to go alone, and we really do not like being sent back to our childish leading-strings. Regulations, for instance, respecting the management of cheap trains; that they shall not stop very long at stations; that the number of passengers shall be limited, according to the dimensions of the carriage in such a train; that the carriage shall be lighted at night—are all very well in their intention; and the case of cheap trains is probably that in which the public would be most disposed, for the sake of the poorer classes, to tolerate a departure from the general rule of keeping government interference at its minimum.”

We have scarcely much hope that the public will see the mischief of handing over railway business to governmental direction. Terrified by the occasional happening of accidents, which, when they do happen, are well calculated to strike terror into the public mind,—bewildered by the magnitude and apparently irresponsible power of the gigantic and complicated bodies who manage the transit service of the country,—above all, impressed partly, as we have observed, by the former efforts of the railway companies themselves, with the idea, that railway undertakings are not of the same class as other trading undertakings, and dreading some vast and mysterious tyranny at the hands of railway companies, the public, in the hope of defeating their imagined enemy, clamour for the interference of the executive; and the executive will, of course, accept as much power as the public and the Legislature can wrench from the hands of the now unhappy companies, and deliver up into their hands. With the railway companies, as such, no one, probably, will very much sympathise, should they be thus sold into bondage. Every lawyer knows that they have done their best to be unto themselves their own law. But that danger has passed; the law has controlled and subjected them to rule; and the question now is one wholly beside the merits or demerits of companies, and company management. The question is, whether the law is now to adopt in this country a new principle, and, no longer proceeding upon the doctrine of leaving trade to be managed quietly between the trader and his customer, to assume, that neither the trader nor the customer knows his own interest; to assume, that good will result from not allowing men to embark and manage their own capital in their own way; and that there is something peculiar in the circumstance, that a road is made of iron instead of granite, from which the consequence follows, that the people cannot safely travel upon it, unless the road and all that moves upon it are under government direction.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Charles Pecker, Esq., to be her Majesty's Solicitor-General for the Island of Barbadoes.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery:—William George Cursham, of Nottingham; William Sutcliffe, of Hebden-bridge, near Halifax, Yorkshire.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Sir Albert Denison Conyngham, Bart., commonly called Lord Albert Denison Conyngham, for the city of Canterbury, in the room of James Bradshaw, Esq., deceased; Robert Peckoff, Esq., for the borough of Lewes, in the room of Sir Howard Elphinstone, Bart., who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Chiltern Hundreds.

This day is published, in one thick Volume, royal 8vo., price 1l. 18s. boards,

THE ELEVENTH EDITION of SIR E. B. SUGDEN'S PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of VENDORS and PURCHASERS of ESTATES.

* * * By adopting a smaller type and adding to the fullness of the pages, this Edition has been very considerably reduced in bulk and price. The intrinsic value of the work has not in any way been affected by the alteration in appearance, as the text remains unabridged, while the facility of reference is increased by the consolidation of the former three indexes.

S. Sweet, 1, Chancery-lane, London.

Of whom may be had, recently published,

SIR EDWARD SUGDEN'S TREATISE on POWERS.

In 3 vols. royal 8vo., price 2l. in boards,

FINLASON'S LEADING CASES on PLEADING.

Just published, in royal 8vo., price 12s. boards,

A SELECTION of LEADING CASES on PLEADING, and PARTIES to ACTIONS; with Practical Notes, elucidating the Principles of Pleading, (as exemplified in Cases of most frequent occurrence in Practice), by a reference to the earliest Authorities; and designed to assist both the Practitioner and Student. By W. FINLASON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Special Pleader.

"The Notes themselves are learned, and, we may add, elaborate Treatises upon the matters to which they relate. . . . The frequent reference to the very fountain heads of the Law,—the Year Books and the older Reports,—honourably distinguishes these Notes."—Law Magazine, No. 10, N. S., February, 1847.

"Mr. Finlason has displayed great learning in the Notes, and we heartily commend his volume to the careful and repeated perusal of every law student; and it will doubtless be found a useful addition to the library of the practising Pleader, who may often advantageously refresh his memory with it."—Law Times, 30th January, 1847.

LONDON, MARCH 27, 1847.

THE County Courts are, it seems, to commence actual business in the course of next month; some on the 13th; some a little later; but all, we believe, before the end of the month.

We have no doubt that they will ultimately prove a great boon to the small trader, and in many cases to traders of considerable business, because there are many trades in which business is carried on to the extent of very large annual sums in the aggregate, without any one demand ordinarily exceeding 20% in the year. But we do very much doubt whether the prevalent idea will be realised, of getting altogether rid in these courts, of lawyers. The new courts, it will be recollected, are not, and are not intended to be, Courts of Request; it is not intended that justice, or more frequently injustice, shall be administered by a thorough contempt for law; but it is intended to decide legal claims according to law, only, in so doing, to exclude, as much as possible, all extraneous sources of expense.

For this purpose, endeavours, the spirit of which cannot be too much praised, have been made to simplify the course of proceedings in the recovery of demands in the new courts; and, so far as things in themselves sometimes inevitably difficult and complex are capable of being simplified and rendered easy, the rules of practice issued by the learned judges, (see ante, p. 73), and the forms directed to be used, (see ante, p. 84), shew the great desire of the heads of the law to render the act available for the people, and the skill with which they have carried that desire into effect.

But, in order to see how far it will be, in at least a great many cases, practicable for the suitors to dispense with legal assistance of some kind, let us look at a few of the rules and a few of the forms. If A. has worked for B. until his bill for work and labour amounts to 10%, and B. refuses or neglects to pay, the course may not be difficult, B. being living, and having no special defence to make, the debt being either a simple-contract debt, or B. having given a bond or some other security, making it a debt of higher degree. The clerk of the court will probably assist A. in filling in the summons to appear to plead, (Form No. 1), and proof being given of the execution of the work, and no reason assigned by defendant for not paying, judgment may be given.

But suppose, before the plaint is entered, B. dies, leaving his executors, who reply that they have fully administered; the plaintiff will then have to look to the 31st, 32nd, and 33rd rules of practice, which run as follows:—"If the sole defence by executors or administrators be, that they have fully administered, and the judgment of the Court is for the defendants, it shall be, that the amount found to be due be paid and levied out of the assets of the deceased quando acciderint, and the costs shall be in the discretion of the judge.

Where judgment has been given against executors and administrators, that the amount be levied upon the assets of the deceased quando acciderint, the plaintiff may at any time proceed by plaint against them, suggesting that assets have come in their hands; and the Court shall proceed and give judgment thereon,—if for the plaintiff, as in rule 29,—and if for the defendants, they shall be entitled to their costs.

Where judgment has been given, that the debt (or damages) and costs be levied de bonis testatoris, and the plaintiff complains that the defendants have been guilty of a devastavit, inasmuch as no goods of the deceased are forthcoming to satisfy the execution issued, then a summons may be taken out in the form given in the Schedule, or to the like effect; or thereupon, as in ordinary cases, the Court shall proceed to the hearing and judgment; and if judgment be given against such executors or administrators, then it shall be that they pay the debt or damages and costs, to be levied de bonis testatoris si, &c., et si non, de bonis propriis.

If the plaintiff is not sufficiently puzzled by the use of the technical words, almost unavoidably used in these rules, and if, believing that the executors have had assets, he comprehends, without legal assistance, that he is to go into court and shew that goods of the testator have come to the hands of the executors, and have been wasted by them, his next step will be to appear in court, and there support his charge against the defence of the executors, consisting possibly of this: that, as to one of them, admitting that he has had the assets, he has wasted them, and has not a shilling wherewith to pay; as to the other, that the assets never were in his hands; to which plaintiff may have to reply, that, true, the assets never were actually in the solvent executor's hands, but that he did acts by which they had got into the hands of his co-executor, — a sort of case on which much legal learning may be required. Or the defence may be, first, if plaintiff claims as for a debt of superior degree, that it is not so; secondly, that, admitting the plaintiff's demand to be for a debt of superior degree, the executors have paid away all the assets in payment of debts of inferior degree without notice of the plaintiff's claim. Whereupon will arise, first, the pleasant questions to an unprofessional person, whether the plaintiff's debt is a debt by specialty or by simple contract; and that, being disposed of, may be followed by a discussion, on failure of proof of actual notice, of the equally pleasant and intelligible doctrine of constructive notice.

The judges cannot refuse to entertain these questions. There is nothing in the act to alter the law; and they cannot arrive at a decision on the question, devastavit or not, by any short cut. They must go through the law to arrive at it, and they must either hear the questions properly argued, or they must decide according to the light of their own learning, without any assistance; a duty which even superior judges are always unwilling to take upon themselves. Difficulties not less considerable may attend cases where the defendant pleads infancy or coverture; and it must be observed, that the cases we are putting, are only cases of extreme difficulty, though likely to be not of unfrequent occurrence. We are not noticing all the ordinary difficulties which beset unprofessional persons in being prepared with proof even of the most ordinary facts, — difficulties arising out of their habit of taking for granted whatever they themselves know and believe, and of their disposition to think everything good evidence that carries conviction to their own minds. We apprehend, that, except in the very plainest cases of debtor and creditor, the preliminary advice and the advocacy in court of professional persons, and of well-informed professional persons, will be found absolutely indispensable in conducting the business of the new courts; and that the sooner the public comes to that unpalatable conclusion, the sooner they will extract from the County Courts, not all the benefit they have imagined, for that they will never get, but all the benefit, and that will not be trivial, that the courts are capable of producing.

ON SEEING TO THE APPLICATION OF PURCHASE-MONEY FOR PROPERTY CHARGED WITH THE PAYMENT OF DEBTS AND LEGACIES.

The point upon which the Vice-Chancellor of England and Lord Langdale differed in the cases of Forbes v. Peacock (11 Sim. 152; 12 Sim. 528) and Page v. Adams (4 Beav. 269) has been decided by Lord Lyndhurst, C., in accordance with the opinion of the Master of the Rolls. (Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Phil. 717). But, as the circumstances in Forbes v. Peacock were such as might be thought insufficient to support the Vice-Chancellor's decision, even upon his own principles, and as Lord Lyndhurst's judgment contains dicta, which, to say the least of them, go very far beyond any former authority, the question cannot be considered to be yet in a settled state. We propose, therefore, in this paper to lay before our readers in some detail the state of the authorities.

The primary fund for the payment of the debts of a person deceased, is, in the absence of special circumstances, his personal estate. The possession of this by the executor, or by an administrator, whether rightfully constituted, or becoming liable in that character by his own unauthorised act, renders him personally liable both at law and in equity. In equity, the fund itself is also considered as charged, to a certain extent, with the debts. "The Court of Chancery," said Buller, J., in Farr v. Newman, (4 T. R. 636), "considers the fund as debtor, and therefore they pursue that, collect it all into their own hands under the notion of taking an account, call all persons before them who have any demand on that fund, and distribute it amongst all according to their priorities at law, (if they have any) or if not, equally. But that Court has never said, that, if the effects of a testator get bona fide and for a good consideration into the hands of a third person, they will take it from him. The case of Elliot v. Merryman (2 Eq. Abr., 450, s. 6; Id. 686, s. 12; 2 Atk. 41) proves directly the contrary. This Court cannot call all the creditors together, cannot compel an account of all the effects, or administer the same relief which equity does; therefore we must not be governed by the rules of equity on this subject. At law there is no such thing as a fund in the hands of the executor being the debtor, but the person of the executor, in respect of the assets which he has in his hands, is the debtor. If he admits (or, which is the same thing, does not deny) assets, the judgment and execution are to levy the debt out of the assets in his hands, because he is sued as executor, and is liable in respect of them; but he is not permitted to say, 'You have recovered against the assets, and therefore you must find them, or go unpaid;' on the contrary, if he do not produce them, or they cannot be found, he (the executor) immediately becomes personally liable in an action of debt, suggesting a devastavit." Both at law and in equity the executor can pass a perfect title to any part of the personally over which he acquires dominion. His disposition of the assets for valuable consideration, and without fraud, so far as the purchaser is concerned, binds both creditors and legatees. "The general rule both of law and equity is clear, that an executor may dispose of the assets of the testator, that over them he has absolute power, and that they cannot be followed by the testator's creditors. It would be monstrous if it were otherwise, for then no one would deal with an executor. He must sell in order to effect the will, but who would buy if liable to be called to an account? It is also clear, that, if at the time of alienation the purchaser knows they are assets, this is no evidence of fraud, for all the testator's debts may have been already satisfied; or, if he knows that the debts are not all satisfied, must he look to the application of the money? No one would buy on such terms. There is one exception, indeed, where a contrivance appears between the purchaser and executor to make a devastavit." (Per Lord Mansfield, C. J., Whale v. Booth, 4 T. R. 625, n.). "At law, the executor has power to dispose of and alien the assets of the testator, and when they are aliened no creditor by law can follow them; for the demand of a creditor is only a personal demand against the executor in respect of the assets come to his hands, but no lien on the assets. This Court will indeed follow assets upon voluntary alienations by collusion of the executor; but if the alienation is for a valuable consideration, unless fraud is proved, this Court suffers it as well as at law, and will not control it, for a purchaser from an executor has no power of knowing the debts of the testator; and if this Court, upon the appearance of debts afterwards, would controul such purchasers, nobody would venture to deal with executors. It is objected, first, that these were the equitable assets of Sir Richard Billings, and that the plaintiff purchased nothing but an equitable interest, burthened with all the equity in the hands of the person from whom he purchased. But that is a rule only where there is a lien on the thing itself, and I know no difference in this Court between the power of an executor to dispose of equitable and legal assets." (Per Lord Hardwicke, C., 1 Atk. 463)*.

The personal assets being liable, in the first instance, to the creditors, and the executor being absolutely entrusted with the administration of them, it follows that, in selling any part of the assets, the executor is to be presumed to be selling for the payment of debts; and the exemption of the purchaser from liability to ascertain the existence of debts, or to see to the due application of the money, arises from the necessity of the case. The executor is the person entrusted with the property; even he cannot know at any particular time whether or not all the debts are paid; and it would be impossible for a stranger to satisfy himself on the point. So that, unless those who deal with an executor could obtain their discharge from him alone, it would be impossible for the latter to administer the estate at all. If the executor apply to other purposes assets which are required for payment of debts, it is a devastavit; if he sell property specifically bequeathed when it is not wanted for payment of debts, it is a breach of trust; but a stranger, dealing with the executor in good faith, is not required to watch over the interests of either creditors or legatees, because, under ordinary circumstances, he cannot be vigilant to any purpose. (Humble v. Bell, 2 Vern. 444; Elliot v. Merryman, Barnard, 78; Ewer v. Corbet, 2 P. Wms. 148). But, if the purchaser has notice of circumstances which are inconsistent with the presumption that the executor is duly administering the property, he is not within the protection of the rule; as, where the executor mortgages or sells part of the assets as a security for, or in satisfaction of, his own personal debt. (Scott v. Tyler, 2 Dick. 712; Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 182; Wilson v. Moore, 1 My. & K. 126, 337, (overruling the judgment in Neugent v. Gifford, 1 Atk. 463, and the decision in Mead v. Orrery, 3 Atk. 235). "The mere circumstance that they are executors will not vitiate any transaction with them, for the power of disposition is generally incident, being frequently necessary, and a stranger shall not be put to examine whether, in the particular instance, it has been discreetly exercised. But, from the proposition that a third person is not bound to look to the trust in every respect, does it follow that, dealing with the executor for the assets, he may equally look upon him as absolute owner, and wholly overlook his character as trustee, when he knows the executor is applying the assets to a purpose wholly foreign to his trust? No decision necessarily leads to such a consequence." (Per Sir W. Grant, 7 Ves. 152; see 14 Ves. 363; 2 Sim. & Stu. 206). Even when there is no apparent fraud on the part of the executor, the purchaser is not protected from the claims of legatees if he knows that payment of creditors is not the executor's object; as in Cubbridge v. Boatwright, (1 Russ. 547), where the testatrix had directed that a leasehold should be sold, and the produce divided among five persons; B., a purchaser from H., the administrator, under a false representation that the latter had become beneficially entitled by an arrangement with the legatees, was held liable to the latter, on the express ground that his vendor did not profess to be selling the leaseholds as assets. "If," said Lord Gifford, M. R., "H., in his character of executor, had sold the property to B., and B. had been ignorant of the real nature of the transaction, the sale could not have been set aside."

A stranger, then, dealing for assets needs not to look beyond the words or conduct of the executor for the purpose of ascertaining whether there are debts unpaid, or whether the executor is duly performing his trust. Hence, if the executor is also legatee of a specific chattel, he may (after a reasonable time has elapsed from the death of the testator to enable him to ascertain the amount of the debts and the sufficiency of the other assets for payment of them) mortgage that chattel as a security for his own debt, and settle it on his marriage, or otherwise deal with it as his own: his doing so will amount to a sufficient representation that the circumstances are such as to warrant the act. In this respect a purchaser from the executor stands in the same situation as a purchaser without notice from any other legatee after assent. (Taylor v. Hawkins, 8 Ves. 209; Spackman v. Timbrell, 8 Sim. 260; see 4 Bro. C. C. 136; 17 Ves. 163). In Taylor v. Hawkins a mortgage by the executor of leaseholds specifically bequeathed to him, made within seven months after the testator's death, was sustained against creditors.

The reason and the rule extend even to a sale of a portion of the personal assets expressly directed by the testator to be exonerated from the debts out of his other property. A testator cannot protect any part of his assets from liability to his creditors, and, by declaring that specific property shall be exonerated, he does no more than the rules of equity do, in favour of specific legatees, in the absence of any such declaration. A bona fide purchaser from the executor of property so directed to be exonerated from debts is, therefore, as safe from claimants under the will, as if no such direction had been made.

In some of the cases cited above, the parties seeking to impeach the transaction were creditors; in others, legatees. Of course, where the purchaser is protected, he is protected against both classes of claimants—against creditors, because he cannot take measures for their protection; against legatees, because the foundation of the purchaser's indemnity is the assumption, that the executor is selling for the payment of debts, which are paramount to the claims of legatees. If the thing sold has been specifically bequeathed, but the executor has not assented to the bequest, the purchaser acquires a good title at law as well as in equity; if assent has preceded the sale, he gets only an equitable title, (Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 1 Ch. Cas. 256*), liable, of course, to be defeated by a sale by the legatee to a purchaser for value, without notice. On the other hand, where the purchaser has reason to believe that payment of debts is not the executors' object, then, as he is not, by the rule under consideration, protected from the claims of creditors, so he is not, by that rule, protected from the claims of legatees, and must rest his title to exoneration, if he can, on other grounds, such as an express power, conferred by the will on the executors, of selling and giving discharges. If the executor has no such power, then, in case of a sale avowedly not made for payment of debts, the purchaser must see that the sale is made, and the purchase-money applied, in conformity with the trusts of the will; for, here, there is no class like that of creditors, uncertain as to its members and their respective rights; but the objects of the trusts and the nature of their claims may be ascertained from the will; and the purchaser must either seek them out, and obtain their concurrence, or see that the will has invested the executor with power to discharge him. (See Eland v. Eland, 4 My. & C. 420). Thus, a mortgage of assets by an executor, who is also residuary legatee, to secure his private debt, may be set aside, even at the suit of a pecuniary legatee. (Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 152). But such a mortgage, for the reason already stated, would be safe against creditors.

On these points the law is settled as to personal assets, which, by the common law, (recognised and confirmed by the Statute of Westminster 2nd, 13 Edw. 1, c. 19; see Snelling's case, 5 Rep. 83), are subject to a charge or liability for payment of debts, in priority to all claims of volunteers. With respect to real property, the case is somewhat different. At common law, freehold estates were not liable to creditors even by bond or covenant; but, descending to the heir, they created in him a personal liability to the extent of their value. If they were devised away from the heir, the creditor had no remedy, and a creditor by simple contract had no rights in respect even of the descended freeholds. The statutes against fraudulent devises (3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14; 6 & 7 Will. & M. c. 14; 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 4) have subjected devisees to the same liability as heirs, and, after passing special enactments in favour of the simple-contract creditors of traders, (47 Geo. 3, c. 74; 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 47), the Legislature has at last declared, that the freehold and copyhold estates of every person, whether a trader or not, shall, at his death, be assets for payment of his debts, to be administered in equity, unless he has himself by will charged them with, or devised them subject to the payment of, his debts. Lastly, a testator may by a charge, express or implied, subject his real estates to a trust for the payment of his debts. The remedies of the creditors are different in these different cases. Under a speciality he has a personal remedy against the heir and devisees at law, as well as in equity; he has no remedy, either at law or in equity, against a purchaser for valuable consideration from the heir or devisee, though with notice. Even against an alienee who had paid no consideration, he had no remedy before the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, which makes void any conveyance intended to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, but contains a saving of bonâ fide conveyance for value, without notice of intended fraud. (See 7 Beav. 124; 1 Eq. Ab. 149, pl. 6; Cro. El. 350; 5 Rep. 60 a; Spackman v. Timbrell, 8 Sim. 253; Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 112*; Matthews v. Jones, 1 Anst. 515; Sugd. Vend. 834). Under a simple contract, he has a remedy in equity against the heir or devisee personally, and against the land in his hands, but not against a bonâ fide purchaser for value, with or without notice of the existence of debts. Under a charge or trust for payment of debts, he has a direct equity against the land itself, except in the hands of a purchaser or mortgagee who has seen his purchase or mortgage money into the hands of the executor or of the person appointed by the testator to give discharges. A bonâ fide purchaser of land, therefore, from the heir or devisee, where there is no charge of debts, is not liable to see to the application of the money, because the land itself was never charged; a bonâ fide purchaser of land charged with debts is not liable to see to the application of the money, or the necessity of the sale, for the reasons already mentioned with regard to personal estate, viz. the impossibility of his doing so to any purpose. The reasons of his exoneration in the two cases are different, and the consequences are different, where a charge of legacies raises the question, whether the purchaser should see to the payment of the legacies. If there is no charge of debts, the several persons beneficially interested in the real estate take it as assets, rendering them personally liable to the extent of the value of their beneficial title. The heir is liable for so much as is not devised away; the devisee is liable for so much as will not be required for payment of the legacies charged; the legatee is liable to the extent of his legacy, if he receive it before the debt is paid; but, until the commencement of a suit, (see Green v. Low, 3 Bro. C. C. 217), the creditor has no lien upon the estate itself; nor has either the heir or devisee, or the legatee, any power of administering the land, or any power over it beyond that which his beneficial ownership gives him. He takes the assets, but not the power of administering them; he is like an administrator de son tort, who has all the responsibility, but none of the powers of a properly constituted administrator. Consequently, the purchaser from the heir or devisee is as much bound to obtain the concurrence of the legatee as he would be bound to obtain that of any other person interested in the estate: he deals with all as owners, with none as parties administering assets, even though it should happen that the devisee be also executor. (Horn v. Horn, 2 S. & S. 448; Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Kee. 219). The dealing, therefore, not being pretended to be an administration of the assets, it is immaterial, as regards the claims of creditors, whether it is a sale or a settlement; (Spackman v. Timbrel, 8 Sim. 260); and it would be equally immaterial whether it was made after the lapse of a reasonable time from the testator's death, or the very day after his death, unless the circumstances were such as to bring the case within the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. (Townsend v. Westcott, 2 Beav. 240; 4 Id. 58). It is true, that personal assets are in the same situation as real assets, with regard to exemption from the lien of debts—from being followed by the creditors;—but this exemption arises from a different cause in the two cases. In the case of real assets, the assets themselves are never liable to the creditors; but "the heir, being named in the obligation, is considered to be himself a debtor—not, indeed, a debtor liable to pay the debt under all circumstances, but liable to the extent of the value of the real estate descended,—and is not restrained from alienation." (7 Beav. 124). The personal assets, on the contrary, are primarily liable for the debts, and the exemption arises from the fact, that the executor or administrator is appointed to administer them, and he cannot do this unless he has a power to discharge purchasers. In the case of real assets not subject to a charge, there is no person appointed to administer; and the different parties interested as volunteers,—heirs, devisees, or legatees,—do not take as they would take personally, subject to a paramount legal title in an executor or administrator.

* Mr. Coote, indeed, (Treat. on Mortg. 200, n., 2nd ed.), considers, "that, if a purchaser or mortgagee shall bonâ fide deal with an executor within a reasonable time after the testator's death, and obtain possession of the muniments of title, (he is speaking of leaseholds), a specific legatee would never be permitted, either at law or in equity, to set up the executor's assent against the sale or mortgage; for, by sale and delivery, the title of the purchaser or mortgagee is complete. (Vide Scott v. Tyler, Dick. 725; 17 Ves. 166)." It is conceived, that the proposition, that an executor retains, or can confer, any legal dominion over a leasehold specifically bequeathed, after assent, is wholly unsupported by principle or authority.

But when the estate is charged with debts, it is, for this purpose, placed in the same position in equity as personal estate,—it is specifically liable,—and the purchaser, before he can be secure from the creditors, must satisfy himself either that he is dealing with the party appointed to administer, or (which is the same thing), that the latter has declared that he has satisfied the debts aliunde, or has funds sufficient to satisfy them. The impossibility of attaining any greater certainty in respect of debts, makes it essential that the purchaser should be discharged in either case*. Thus, a purchaser of a leasehold from an executor, or from a legatee, after assent, is safe, without seeing to the payment of debts; and a marriage-settlement by the legatee would be equally unimpeachable. (Spackman v. Timbrel, 8 Sim. 260). As far as concerns the claims of creditors, a purchaser of real estate charged with debts, must be in precisely the same situation. A charge of debts gives the creditors the same rights in equity against that estate that they have against the personal assets by the general rule of law. In equity, the personal assets are to be considered as subject to a charge or trust for payment of debts. Certainly, the charge gives the creditor no better right against the realty than he has in all cases against the personality. It is true that a charge prevents the Statute of Limitations from running against him in respect of the realty; but this does not prove that he has any higher rights or a more direct trust, because it has been settled by the highest authority, that a charge or trust for payment of debts out of personality will not exclude the Statute of Limitations, expressly on the ground that such a trust is nugatory; the trust already exists; executors are already trustees. (Jones v. Scott, 1 Russ. & My. 255; 4 Cl. & Fin. 382). It follows, that the decisions as to the liabilities of parties dealing for value with personal estate, in respect of debts or legacies, are applicable to similar cases when the subject of the dealing is real estate charged with debts and legacies. So that if real estate is given, subject to a charge of debts, to A., and after a reasonable time the executors or trustees for payment of debts, release to A., a purchaser from him, without notice of any fraud, will be safe from the claims of any unsatisfied creditors. And so, if real estate is devised to the executor for his own benefit, subject to a charge of debts, after a reasonable time he may deal with it as his own, and sell, mortgage, or settle it, discharged from all liability, to any unsatisfied creditors. This conclusion has been doubted; and even a decision to the contrary has been inadvertently made. (Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Kee. 206). But its soundness must be manifest, when the consequences of a different doctrine are considered. If an executor or trustee for payment of debts, is unable after a reasonable time to declare the charge satisfied, and to release the devisee, or, being himself the devisee, to deal with the property as his own, the beneficial enjoyment intended by the testator can never be had, except through the medium of a pretended sale for payment of debts, although, possibly, the testator died without owing any. For a trust for payment of debts excludes all the Statutes of Limitations as against parties with notice, and no one could take the estate without notice of the charge; and that notice of the particular debts is immaterial, is the very point of the objection. The estate would, therefore, be unsaleable under the ownership, and could only be discharged from the trust by a sale founded on a false representation, or through the medium of a suit.

* This reason is well illustrated by the qualification introduced by Lord Hardwicke in his statement of the rule, "that a purchaser or mortgagee need not see to the application of the money where no schedule of debts." (Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. sen. 215; 1 Dick. 132). When the only charge is of specified debts, they are as ascertainable as legacies, and the purchaser, being able, is bound to see that they are paid. When once the money for payment of debts is raised and in the hands of the trustees, the land is for ever discharged, even in the hands of the heir, devisee, or other volunteer; for the estate is debtor for the debts and legacies, and not for the faults of the trustees. (Anon., 1 Salk. 153).

In the case alluded to, (Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Kee. 207), the complexity of the circumstances, perhaps, occasioned the true point to be overlooked. The testator devised his Sinderly estate to his nephew, W. B., in fee, charged with 3800*l.*, to be paid to his executors thereafter named, within a year from his decease; and he gave his Kirklington estate to his nephew, J. B., in fee, subject to a similar charge of 1400*l.* After making some specific bequests, he gave the said sums of 3800*l.* and 1400*l.*, and the residue of his real and personal estate, to the said W. B., J. B., and his nephew, G. B., absolutely as tenants in common, but charged with the payment of his debts, and he appointed them his executors. J. B. and G. B. alone proved the will. The testator died in 1824, and W. B. took possession of the Sinderly estate. In 1826, by indenture made between W. B. [J. B. ?] and G. B. of the one part, and J. B. [W. B. ?] of the other, reciting, that, by the will, the two sums of 3800*l.* and 1400*l.* were given to the three nephews, (but without noticing the charge of debts), and that they had apportioned the sums between them, and settled all accounts as to them, J. B. and G. B. released to W. B. all claims upon the Sinderly estate, and, by a similar indenture of the same date, the other estate was released from the 1400*l.* W. B. and G. B. afterwards mortgaged these several estates. The testator at the time of his death carried on a banking business in partnership with J. B. and one W. T. In 1832, the plaintiff commenced proceedings to recover a debt due from the firm in the testator's lifetime. Lord Langdale, M. R., held, that the claim was not barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that the estates in the hands of the mortgagees were liable to the amounts of the respective charges of 3800*l.* and 1400*l.* "If the two sums of 3800*l.* and 1400*l.* had been raised and paid to the executors, I think that the mortgagees would not have been bound to see to their application; and there might have been circumstances under which the declaration and release of the executors would have protected them; but they had notice of the will and of the trading; they knew that, by the will, the executors were bound to pay the debts, and that the sums of 3800*l.* and 1400*l.* were given with the residuary property to the executors, chargeable with the debts, and with this knowledge, they take a title under the deed of 1826, by which it is so far from appearing that the money was paid to the executors, that I think the contrary appears, for the sums 3800*l.* and 1400*l.* are treated merely as legacies to the nephews, who are stated to have apportioned and divided the amount among themselves. The consequence, I think, is, that the releases only operate to the extent of the beneficial interest to which the executors, as legatees, were entitled to the charges, and that, for the benefit of creditors, the legatees continue to be affected with the charges against the mortgagees, who took under such a title." The case may, perhaps, be considered to have been decided on the special circumstances, though it must be confessed they were altogether insufficient to support the decision.

But in Eland v. Eland, (1 Beav. 235; 4 My. & C. 420), where the point arose, the Master of the Rolls, in effect, overruled Braithwaite v. Britain, and this decision was affirmed by Lord Cottenham, C., on appeal. In that case the testator had devised real estate, subject to a general charge of debts and legacies, to his son in fee, and appointed the son executor. Nine years after the testator's death, the devisee mortgaged the estate, with a covenant against all incumbrances except the legacies. The estate proved insufficient for payment of the debts, legacies, and mortgage money; and it was held that the mortgagee took, subject to the legacies, but not to the debts; not subject to the debts, on account of the general rule; subject to the legacies, because, by his contract, he had undertaken to be subject to them. How the case would have stood in the opinion of Lord Cottenham, if the mortgagee had not so undertaken, is not very clear: there are passages in the judgment which are not easily reconcilable with principle, or even with other parts of the same judgment. It was further held, that the amount of the legacies for which the mortgagee was liable, being raised, was to be applied as assets for payment of the unsatisfied debts.

Rogers v. Rogers (6 Sim. 364) may be classed with Eland v. Eland. There real estates were devised to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee, subject to debts and legacies. A. was appointed executrix. A. and B. mortgaged to C., and covenanted against all incumbrances, "except the legacies." D. took a transfer of this security, and made a further advance. He was held to take, subject to the legacies.

It is conceived, that even intimation to the purchaser or mortgagee, that there were debts of the testator remaining unpaid, would not alone be sufficient to make him liable to the creditors for dealing with the executor, after a reasonable time for ascertaining the extent of the debts, as if he were absolute owner. The purchaser must be considered to have understood that the executor had other funds in his hands sufficient for the payment of his debts, and to have trusted the application of those funds to the executor, in the same manner as a purchaser, on a sale expressly for payment of debts, trusts the application of his purchase-money to the executor. The danger to the creditors seems to be no greater, and the inconvenience of a different rule to the parties beneficially interested no less, in the one case than in the other.

Reviews.

The Law of Railways and Railway Companies, &c. By WILLIAM HODGES, Esq., Barrister. London, 1847. [Sweet.]

Mr. Hodges's book has been long expected by the Profession, and though the delay in its publication may have been inconvenient to many, the cause of it is sufficiently apparent upon inspection of the work itself, which travels over the whole of the vast field of statute and case law, affecting railways and railway business. We have on more than one occasion in THE JURIST, inculcated the doctrine, that a lawyer who gets up a hurried exposition of a statute, or a careless epitome of the law in any given department, merely for the sake of seeing his name in print, offers a species of insult to the Profession, and should expect the most merciless dissection at the hands of the critic. But, on the other hand, when we find a lawyer betaking himself in earnest to the composition of a text-book, in which he obviously uses his best endeavours to exhaust any subject of importance, then we hold that he is entitled to a considerate, and even lenient, examination of his work, in return for his pains and earnest endeavour, even should he partially fail in his attempt. In this spirit we commenced the examination of Mr. Hodges's work, which extends over about 700 pages, (exclusive of statutes and forms), and discusses the law as it relates to every step in the formation of a railway company, and every right arising out of its proceedings as a company, after its complete formation. But although Mr. Hodges is entitled, in our view, to be criticised in this spirit, he does not require it: he has not only laboured, but he has laboured with success.

The work is divided into seven chapters: the first treats of the statute-law applicable to railways; the second of the rights and liabilities of railway companies as carriers; the third of the assessment of railways to the poor; the fourth of the remedies by mandamus; the fifth of proceedings by injunction and other proceedings in equity; the sixth of the dissolution of railway companies, and the rights of allottees; and the seventh, of the liabilities of promoters.

The whole subject, therefore, of the rights and liabilities of railway companies, and of those on whom they set, comes under review, and, we will add, is fully, clearly, and practically expounded.

The 4th and 5th sections of the first chapter will be found particularly useful to the practitioner. The 4th treats of the constitution of a railway company, and the 5th of its powers to take land; powers which have been, and probably will be, so long as there are railways to be made, a most fertile source of litigation. In this, the 5th section of Chapter I, Mr. Hodges has given some useful practical forms relating to the proceedings of companies in using their powers to take land. We think, however, that Mr. Hodges needed not in this part of the work, in ushering in the 68th section of the 8 Vict. c. 18, (for meeting the requirements of the cases where lands have been taken without proper authority), to have introduced it to the notice of the reader by the very naïve observation, "that cases may occur where lands have been taken as injuriously affected, during the formation of the railway, and the party injured may nevertheless have never received any notice to treat or offer of compensation from the company." Mr. Hodges must surely be too much of a lawyer not to know, indeed, myriads of the cases that he himself cites shew, that not only such cases may occur, but that they were, until checked by the law, a part of the regular railway code, and are still indulged in, whenever companies dare to venture upon them. The extensive and important subject of compensation is very fully treated, and a great number of authenticity upon it are collected, both upon the question of compensation for direct injury, and that for indirect injury.

We notice, in the chapter on the constitution of railway companies, an omission of the case of Young v. Smith, (10 Jur. 52), in which it was decided, that the prohibition contained in the 26th section of the Joint-stock Companies Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 110) against shareholders in companies not completely registered selling their shares, does not apply to railway companies. Mr. Hodges had, indeed, arrived, without the decision, at the sound conclusion; see his note in p. 122, in which he expresses himself as follows:—"It is now well known that a grave doubt exists whether all this traffic (the sale of the scrip) is not altogether illegal, by force of the 26th section of the 8 Vict. c. 110. Since the author wrote the note annexed to that section, [referring to a note in the Appendix], in which he expressed an opinion that the section does not apply to railway companies, he has been informed that several very eminent lawyers have expressed a different opinion. But, upon careful re-consideration of the question, the writer, with great deference, still retains his original opinion, that the latter part of the section does not apply to railway companies under any circumstances." Mr. Hodges should, however, have fortified his opinion by quoting the case of Young v. Smith.

On the present state of the law with respect to the rating of railway companies to the relief of the poor, Mr. Hodges observes, (p. 471):—

"It is well known that railway companies are usually common carriers on their own lines of railway, and, as it has been, shewn they are liable to be rated as occupiers of the land on which the railway and its appendances are constructed, but they are not liable to be rated in respect of the profits derived from their stock in trade, or any other personal property; and thus, therefore, arises the practical difficulty which occurs to distinguish accurately between them that which is properly referable to the trade alone, and that increase of value which the carrying on the trade upon the land gives to the occupation of it.

"It has been already stated, that considerable litigation has taken place on the subject of railway rating, and as no less than three cases have been sent to the Court of Queen's Bench for decision, it may be supposed that they afford a clear and distinct rule for rating railways, which may be applied in all future cases. A perusal of the cases will, however, shew that this desirable result has not been attained, and the reason is obvious, for the Court of Queen's Bench, according to its custom, studiously applied and confined the judgments to the facts of each case, as they were stated by the quarter sessions; and it being also a well-established rule that the quantum of the rate is a question solely for the sessions to determine, no opinion could be elicited from the learned judges as to the propriety and sufficiency of the various allowances and deductions which had been made by the sessions out of the gross receipts of the company, that being the process by which the sessions ascertained the rateable value of the railways. This disinclination of the Court to interfere with the mere questions of fact was pointedly put by the Court in one of the cases in the following language:—"We are very unwilling to withhold our aid in settling questions for the sessions of such novelty and difficulty as the railway rating must often bring before them; but we ought not to go beyond our province, and so, perhaps, mislead them. The question involves no principle of law, and we decline to answer it." This pertinent remark is applied to a question of momentous interest to the contending parties, i. e., whether tenants' profits ought to be ascertained by a percentage, calculated upon the original value of the moveable stock belonging to the company, or by a percentage on their gross receipts.

"It is therefore believed, that a careful perusal of the judgments delivered in the cases referred to will lead to the conclusion, that, although the Court has, with great perspicuity, answered the questions of law submitted, the judges declined to give any opinion upon some of the really main points in dispute; if, therefore, disappointment be felt because specific rules applicable to railway rating are not distinctly laid down, it will arise in the peculiar mode in which the cases were stated, and from the circumstances already adverted to."

He then states the substance of the cases that have been decided on this point. (London and South-western case, 2 Rail. Cas. 629; The Grand Junction Railway case, 4 Rail. Cas. 1; and Reg. v. The Great Western Railway Company, 4 Rail. Cas. 28). And concludes the subject with the following observations:—"After an impartial consideration of the whole question, there seems to be reason to conclude, that the present state of the practice relating to railway rating is far from satisfactory. The questions left unanswered by the Court of Queen's Bench must of necessity lead to much litigation at the quarter sessions; and it appears to be extremely desirable that some mode of assessing the rate should be adopted, which will make unnecessary the investigation of accounts, and the laborious process of making deductions from the gross receipts, which are founded upon very unsatisfactory principles, and sometimes upon no principle whatever.

"The rateable value of a farm or manufacture is always ascertained without resorting to a series of intricate deductions from the gross receipts of the occupier, and there seems to be no sufficient reason why a similar course should not be adopted in the case of railways. It is very easy to ascertain the gross receipts per mile of a railway, and also the outgoings per mile, and, by subtracting the latter from the former, the result shews the net profit made by the occupation of the land, and by the possession of capital and stock used in trade, with certain incidental advantages savouring of monopoly, which result from the peculiar nature of railway traffic.

"Now, it is clear, as it has been already shewn, that the whole of this net profit is not rateable to the relief of the poor, but only a portion of it; and there seems to be reason for contending, that the courts of quarter sessions, bearing in mind the principles of the law applicable not only to the rating of railways, but also to farms, manufactories, and other like property, may, without much difficulty, ascertain the portion of the net profit which is fairly attributable to the occupation of the land, and they may thus assess the rate on such portion of the net profits as they may consider, under the circumstances of each particular case, to be consistent with justice. Courts of quarter sessions may at first take different views as to the portion of the net profits which is rateable. Some justices may consider, that, if one half, or even less than one half, of the net profits be made subject to the rate, the value of the occupation of the land would be amply represented. Other justices may, as in The Great Western case, attach the rate on upwards of three fourths of the net profits; but it is believed, that, as the principles of the law of rating are clear and distinct, and may be fully discussed before the justices, an uniformity of decision may be ultimately arrived at.

"It may be objected that the mode of rating thus suggested is not altogether perfect in its operation. But it offers this advantage, that it would be founded on legal principles, and it must not be forgotten, that, if ' the present mode of ascertaining the rateable value of railways is adhered to, the difficult task remains for the justices to determine whether tenants' profits are to be ascertained by a percentage calculated upon the value of the railway stock, or by a percentage on the gross receipts of the company,—a question left undetermined by the Court of Queen's Bench, in The Great Western case. And when this knotty point is decided by the courts of quarter sessions, another of equal difficulty as well as importance arises, i. e. what amount of percentage ought to be allowed for tenants' profits? Should it be 5*l.* per cent. or 50*l.* per cent., or some intermediate amount. Upon these questions the courts of quarter sessions must exercise their own discretion without the expectation of having the slightest assistance afforded them by the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench."

Our space will not permit our giving any further extracts from the work before us. Those which we have given will be sufficient to shew the style of the author, and his mode of placing the law before his readers. In respect to the other subjects of which he has treated, we have found the same clear and business-like execution of the author's task. The equity lawyer will, for instance, find, in the 5th chapter, a very neat resumé of the doctrine and practice of courts of equity in relation to injunctions for and against railway companies, referring to a great mass of authorities, and what is equally useful, particularly at the present moment,—a collection of all the recent cases in equity. On the whole, we may safely say, that Mr. Hodges' work appears to us likely to be very useful to the practising lawyer. It is the fashion, and perhaps it is a very useful fashion, to add to works of this kind an appendix of statutes and precedents. Mr. Hodges has not departed from this fashion, and has added all the material statutes relating to railway companies, and many forms of pleading, notices, &c.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, March 22.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.

Lord Brougham moved the second reading of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill. It was not necessary he should go at length into the question; he should merely state, as succinctly as possible, the object of the present measure. Their Lordships had passed a bill having the effect of abolishing imprisonment for debt in cases where a party, giving up all his property to his creditors, petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy for protection. Where no fraud or gross extravagance appeared to have existed, the debtor was entitled to a final order protecting his person from arrest for the same debt. He proposed to make little or no alteration in that law, but only to effect some changes in the machinery by which that relief was afforded, and to transfer to the insolvent commissioners the jurisdiction given to the bankruptcy commissioners. The six bankrupt commissioners received at present 2000*l.* a-year each; they sat on an average four hours a day for eleven weeks in the year, and were assisted by a registrar at 1000*l.* a-year, and official assignees at not less than 1500*l.* a-year. He proposed to take the insolvency business away from the bankruptcy commissioners, and to reduce their number from six to three. With respect to the Court of Review, it was substantially abolished, its duties being discharged by one of the Vice-Chancellors without remuneration. There was no reason whatever why the whole of the original business of that court should not be transacted by the commissioners themselves, with an appeal on points of law to the Lord Chancellor or the Vice-Chancellors. Two branches of business were connected with the Insolvent Court—the one was the permanent sittings in London, and the other the circuits performed by three commissioners three times a-year, each occupying six weeks. These circuits were attended with great expense to the public. He proposed to abolish the circuits of the insolvent commissioners, and to transfer their jurisdiction to the local judges just appointed under an act introduced by Lord Lyndhurst, and adopted with a few alterations by the present Government. According to the territorial divisions prescribed by the Local Courts Act, no person would have to travel more than eight miles to find a judge, and it must be evident that it would be most convenient to transfer the country insolvency jurisdiction to the newly established tribunals. It might be a question whether it was not desirable to enable the new judges to administer the law in bankruptcy as well as in insolvency; but the present bill did not go so far as that. By the provisions of the present bill the commissioner in insolvency would be invested with power to take into consideration all the circumstances of the cases which might come before him. The commissioner would have to satisfy himself that an insolvent had no prospect of succeeding to property,—that his insolvency was attributable to misfortune, and not to wilful extravagance,—and, above all, that he had not lain by and spent all the money he had—which, if he was insolvent, was his creditors', and not his—but had applied to the Court for relief whilst he had it in his power to pay a dividend of 4*s.* or 5*s.* in the pound. The bill provided, that if the commissioner should be satisfied upon those points, he should be empowered to grant an insolvent protection as to future-acquired property.

The Lord Chancellor said, that it was not his intention to oppose any objection to the motion for the second reading of his noble and learned friend's bill. It was very desirable that the subject should be investigated by a select committee, in which all the legal knowledge of the House might be brought to bear upon it. It might not be improper in him to express a doubt as to the expediency of deciding upon matters of detail with respect to questions which were at present in an unsettled state,—such, for instance, as the question as to the necessity of maintaining the existing distinction between bankruptcy and insolvency. It appeared to him, also, that, until the amount of the business which would devolve upon the new local courts had been ascertained by experience, it would be unwise to transfer the country insolvency jurisdiction to them. The noble and learned lord looked forward to the possibility of transferring some part of the bankruptcy jurisdiction to the same tribunals, but, for the reason he had just assigned, he could not at present express a decided opinion with respect to that proposition.

The bill was read a second time.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Established 1824.

In addition to Assurances on Healthy Lives, this Society continues to grant Policies on the Lives of Persons subject to Gout, Asthma, Eruptive, and other Diseases, by their paying a Premium in proportion to the increased risk. The plan of granting Assurances on Unhealthy Lives originated with this Office in the beginning of 1834.

Every Description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons, in any Station, and of all Ages.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 522 per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third 428 per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January 1847, averaged rather more than 436 per Cent.; and the future Bonuses are almost certain to exceed that amount.

The Fund accumulated and invested for the Security and Benefit of the Assured, already amounts to £259,797; and the Income, which is steadily increasing, is now upwards of £116,000 per Annum.

LONDON, APRIL 3, 1847.

A VERY recent case, which occurred at the Liverpool Assizes, (Reg. v. Chadwick), in which the defence set up by the prisoner, indicted for bigamy, was, that the wife during whose life he married again, was the sister of a former deceased wife, has caused the question of the legality of such marriages to be reopened, and has given occasion to one of the counsel engaged in that case to publish a very elaborate and learned dissertation upon the subject, of which the object is to prove that marriage with a deceased wife's sister is lawful*.

Hitherto, in discussing this question, it has been usually assumed that the table of degrees of consanguinity and affinity acted upon by the Ecclesiastical Courts, has the force of law, for the purpose of determining what are the prohibited degrees. It has, accordingly, been assumed, that marriage with a deceased wife's sister is within the prohibited degrees of affinity; and the only question upon the legality of such marriages has been, with reference to the construction of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, whether that act absolutely incapacitated persons within the prohibited degrees, so as to make marriages between them void in this realm, wherever contracted, or whether it only avoids all such as shall be contracted in this realm. On this point we confess we never had any doubt, that, as to marriages between persons within the prohibited degrees, the act of Will. 4 renders them absolutely impossible, affixing the incapacity to the persons of the parties—not merely regulating forms or ceremonial, and not falling within the rule of the lex loci.

Mr. Foster, however, proceeds upon new ground, going at once to the question, what are the prohibited degrees of affinity? contending, with great ability, and, it must be admitted, with some shew of reason, that, by the law of England, a marriage with a deceased wife's sister is not within the prohibited degrees of affinity, and if not within the prohibited degrees, of course not rendered void by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, which only touches marriages between parties who are within such degrees, the act itself not attempting to define what are prohibited degrees.

The substance of Mr. Foster's argument may be stated in a few words. It is this: that, by tracing the statute-law through a variety of enactments and repeals, the ultimate result is, that the 32 Hen. 8, c. 38, and the 1 Mary, sess. 2, c. 1, are now in force. That, by the former, it is enacted, "that all and every such marriages, as within this Church of England shall be contracted between lawful persons (as by this act we declare all persons to be lawful, that be not prohibited by God's law to marry), such marriages being contract and solemnised in the face of the church, and consummate with bodily knowledge, or fruit of children or child being had therein between the parties so married, shall be, by authority of this present Parliament aforesaid, deemed, judged, and taken to be lawful, good, just, and indissoluble, notwithstanding any pre-contracts . . . ; and that no reservation or prohibition, God's law except, shall trouble or impeach any marriage without the Levitical degrees; and that no person of what estate, degree, or condition soever, he or she shall be admitted to any of the spiritual courts within this King's realm, or any of his grace's other lands and dominions, to any process, plea, or allegation, contrary to this foresaid act." And that by the latter, after much reference to the marriage of Henry VIII with Queen Catherine, and after repealing the statutes passed for bastardising the issue of that marriage, it is declared "that the said marriages had and solemnized betwixt your said most noble father King Henry, and your said most noble mother Queene Katherine, shall be definitively, clearly, and absolutely declared, deemed, and adjudged, to be and stand with God's law and his most holy word, and to be accepted, reputed, and taken of good effect and validitie, to all intents and purposes."

"This being the state of the statute law, it is argued, that, for ascertaining what are the prohibited degrees of affinity, we are thrown back upon the Levitical degrees; and that, by Leviticus, a marriage with a deceased wife's sister is not prohibited, the only prohibition in reference to a wife's sister being, that a man may not have two sisters to wife at once. And for this construction of the 16th verse of the 18th chapter of Leviticus, Mr. Foster cites numerous learned critics, and various translations of the passage, all of which agree in using words shewing that the prohibition is only against marrying a wife's sister, living the first wife.

If these two points are to be assumed, viz. first, that the statute law incorporates in itself the Levitical law, so far as to admit no impediments to marriage which are not found in Leviticus; and, secondly, that the Levitical law does not forbid a marriage with a deceased wife's sister,—the case for the validity of the marriages in question would be made out; for the only remaining point would be, how far the canons can override the statute law. On this there could, one would think, scarcely be a question, since it is in terms an absurdity to say, that the rules of law governing courts, which are dependent for their very existence on the supreme temporal authority, can have any force as against the laws promulgated by that authority. However, the question, if question there ever could be, has been solemnly decided in Middleton v. Croft, (2 Atk. 651); and there is now no doubt whatever that the canons are not of themselves law, but only so far as they are adopted by the statute or common law.

This difficulty, however, arises, assuming the argument to be correct, that the statutes of 32 Hen. 8 and 1 Mary are now the statute law relating to prohibited or permitted marriages, viz. that the statute of Mary is a specific enactment only so far as regards the particular marriage of Henry VIII and Catherine; and that it can only be referred to, in reference generally to marriage with a deceased wife's sister, as a sort of legislative dictum, and not as an actual declaration of the law; and that, as to the 32nd of Hen. 8, that act expressly excepts from its operation marriages contrary to the law of God, without saying what is the law of God. It cannot be that the Legislature considered there could be no marriages contrary to the law of God, except such as were prohibited in Leviticus, for, if that had been the intention, it would have been absurd to introduce the qualification. The statute, therefore, only legalizes marriages without the Levitical degrees, if they be according to the law of God; and that leaves the question still open, whether the law of England, adopting the canons so far as they are not contrary to that law, does not adopt them as the exponent of the law of God, wherever the temporal law has not declared what is the law of God; whether, in fact, the construction of the statute law is not this, that no marriages are forbidden except those which are forbidden by Leviticus or by the canon law?

The subject appears to us one of the greatest legal difficulty, and we shall certainly rejoice to see it settled either by solemn decision or by an act of the Legislature.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The subject of your leading article in THE JURIST of the 20th ultimo, (viz., the operation of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96), is one of considerable importance, and, I trust, sufficiently so to justify my stating the reasons which lead me to differ from your conclusion thereon.

The writer of that article argues, that the object of the acts in question was to give protection to the person of a debtor, upon consideration of his giving up his estate to his creditors; that, where there are no (present) assets, such consideration fails; that the provisions of those acts, and the forms of procedure under them, cannot be complied with by an insolvent having no assets, without involving an absurdity; and that a debtor having no assets to give up must have been guilty of fraud, or gross or culpable negligence.

I submit that the enactments under consideration must be construed with regard to the previously-existing state of the law. Under the Insolvent Debtors Act, (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), any debtor actually within the walls of a prison was entitled to discharge and protection of his person upon petitioning the Insolvent Debtors Court, and filing a schedule of his property,—the effect of which was, to vest his estate and effects in assignees, for the benefit of his creditors; but (excepting the bankrupt laws) no relief existed in the case of a debtor not in prison. I take it, that the aim and end of the insolvent laws are to secure an equitable distribution of the insolvent's estate amongst his creditors, as much as to secure the person of the debtor.

I contend, therefore, that the objects of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, were to extend the benefits of the insolvent law, as it then stood, in a twofold manner, viz., first, to afford to the honest but unfortunate debtor a fair protection, without his submitting to an unnecessary and, perhaps, disastrous imprisonment; and, secondly, to provide for the transfer of the debtor's estate to his creditors, without the latter incurring the useless cost of bringing an action, and proceeding to judgment and execution. The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, carries the same principle further, by authorising and giving effect to special proposals for discharging or compounding the claims of creditors.

Such being (as I contend) the objects of these statutes, what reason can be urged why their provisions should not apply to the case of an insolvent without present assets, as well as the provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; or what greater absurdity would be exhibited by the forms under those acts than by the forms in use under this, when applied to such a case? I have never heard it doubted, that a debtor absolutely without effects is entitled to the benefit of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

But I would submit, that the supposed absurdity vanishes, when it is considered that the "whole estate, present and future," (5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, s. 7), of a debtor is what he surrenders to his creditors; and that, in the absence of present assets, the probability of their arising in future, from the successful exertions of the debtor, or other sources, may sufficiently satisfy the terms of the acts.

The provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict., with regard to special proposals, to which I have before referred, appear to me, in fact, to point to the very case in argument. It is easy to perceive that numerous cases of utter insolvency may occur, wherein an honest debtor, set free from the risk of imprisonment, and from the harassings of legal process, may, by the application of his talents or energies, secure the means of liquidating his debts, fully as effectually, and as advantageously for the creditors, as by the surrender of the minimum in amount of present assets, which would admittedly entitle him to protection.

With regard to the position, that no man can be left altogether destitute of property and in debt without fraud or culpable negligence, it would not, I think, be difficult to multiply cases in proof of its falsity; but one or two may suffice for the purpose.

Take the case of a shareholder in a bank, or mining company, or other public adventure, who, with every reason to suppose himself in prosperous circumstances, may be suddenly rendered penniless, by means which (individually) he could neither foresee nor control; or that of a small farmer, whose all is the stock on his farm, and who, by the failure of a crop and a distress for rent, is reduced to the same state. But if it be said that a man, either should not subject himself to such risks, or should not incur debts, then I would ask, how many men are there whose only property (and that I apprehend as legitimate a capital for speculation as money) may consist in scientific attainments or an inventive faculty, who may not only honourably but prudently incur debts (the creditors being quite aware of the risk) in the prosecution of inventions or discoveries likely to be beneficial to mankind, by the failure of which they may be brought to absolute destitution. These are amongst many similar instances which have occurred, and which will doubtless occur again, in which a man may be in debt without funds, yet free from culpability; and they are cases which I cannot think that the Legislature has intended to exclude from the protection which the acts were designed to afford.

I will conclude by making one farther remark, namely, that, if the construction contended for in your last number be correct, and if, by parity of reasoning, the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70, is to be similarly construed, (which I submit would follow), then that act, and so much of the act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, as relates to compositions with creditors, would become a dead letter in the very case in which their provisions would be most beneficial to creditors. I am, Sir, &c.,

A CONSTANT READER.

We have received the above communication from a correspondent, and insert it in THE JURIST, according to our usual practice, which is, as our readers know, as far as we can, to give every view of a doubtful point, without reference to what may be our own individual opinion upon it.

The communication, however, of our correspondent does not shake the opinion that we have ventured to offer on this subject to our readers. Our correspondent relies upon the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and on the practice under it. The practice under that statute may be disposed of in the same way as the practice under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, viz. as perfectly immaterial. The practice of the commissioners in bankruptcy under an act, may or may not be regular or irregular; but whatever it is, it cannot be held to be the key to the construction of the statute. If it has been irregular, it has simply been wrong, and must be corrected; but to say that the construction of a statute is to be inferred from it, is wholly to beg the question, and to make the law according to the commissioners' error, and not according to the will of the Legislature.

With regard to the construction of the statutes themselves, before the 7 & 8 Vict. can be required to be construed with reference to the construction of the 1 & 2 Vict., it must be shewn that the scope and language of the two statutes are identical. One principal ground for construing the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, as we have done, is the language of the preamble,—language which is not to be found in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; neither is there in the form of petition, requisite pursuant to the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, anything necessarily inconsistent with the total absence of present assets. The petitioner must state that he is willing that his estate and effects shall be vested in the provisional assignee, but he is not required, as he is in a petition under the 7 & 8 Vict., to state that his estate is worth so much, or that there is anything applicable for the benefit of his creditors—words which we do still contend are most absurd, if they are meant to apply to the case where there is, confessedly, nothing to be distributed.

But there is a great difference also between the equities of the two statutes. There is a great difference between protecting a debtor who has been incarcerated by a creditor as the consequence necessarily of hostile proceedings, and whose pennilessness, if penniless he be, is the result of those very hostile proceedings; and giving the right of obtaining protection by a precautionary proceeding, to a debtor against whom no hostile proceedings have been taken. It is perfectly rational, that, in the former case, the debtor should be protected in person on giving up all his future rights to property, and if the words of the statute do not require an opposite construction, it would be, indeed, a harsh thing to say that the Legislature could not mean to protect his person when, by the acts of his creditors, he has been stripped of all his present property. But it is a very different thing to say, that the Legislature meant to hold out to a debtor this sort of protection: "Go on incurring liabilities at your discretion; expend to the very last shilling of your property as your own act; and, when you have done so, we will not inquire whether you might not have stopped sooner, but we will then protect your person upon your giving up, not your present property, of which you have taken care that none shall be left, but your future chances of property."

We say, that, unless this sort of encouragement can be found in the words of the statute, it is not an encouragement that is to be implied; and we repeat, that, looking at the words of the preamble of the 7 & 8 Vict., and at the words of its various clauses, no such intention is to be found in that statute.

It is observed, that there is nothing in our view at all to militate against the intention attributed by our correspondent to the Legislature, to allow an honest debtor, by freeing him from the harassment of legal process, to realise assets for the benefit of his creditors, because, in the first place, our argument is, that, within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Vict., there cannot be an honest debtor who shall have totally denuded himself of assets; and, in the second place, if a debtor having so denuded himself, and having, in conformity with his honest intentions, afterwards acquired some assets, then comes before the Court for protection, he would be clearly entitled to it, and would then come within the circle of protection for which our correspondent contends.

On one point our correspondent appears totally to have misunderstood us. He seems to think that our doctrine is harsh and uncharitable, on this ground, that we attribute dishonesty to the mere act of insolvency. Now we never meant to say, and never did say, that a man cannot become insolvent without dishonesty; but what we did say, and what we repeat, is, that a man cannot strip himself of his last shilling of property, without gross carelessness and culpable negligence. The case that our correspondent puts, of a shareholder in a bank or any other concern, who becomes suddenly insolvent by the failure of such concern, is not in point. Neither is the case of a person whose capital consists of his scientific or inventive acquirements. In either case, the person embarking his capital never does, and never can, embark the absolute entirety of his property; he must retain, and always does retain, according to his position, certain valuable items of property, either for actual and daily use, or for investment; and if the principal concern in which he is engaged fails, he becomes insolvent, it is true, but not wholly without assets. The case that we say is not within the 7 & 8 Vict., is not the case of an insolvent man, which means merely a man who cannot pay in full, but of a man who, being insolvent, knowingly, and necessarily so, goes on from insolvency to actual penilessness; and we ask, is it possible for any man, possessed of any property, to be placed (without proceedings in invitum, stripping him of all property) in such circumstances, as to be absolutely without any assets, except by wilfully delaying his application for protection until he has left nothing for his creditors but his person? We are not called upon to give, and we do not give, any opinion upon the humanity or inhumanity of the statute; but we put it merely upon this: is it possible to conceive a case, in which a debtor, having had something, and having had no hostile proceedings against him, can be brought to have absolutely nothing, without knowing that he was proceeding from insolvency to absolute nullity of assets? And, if there cannot be such a case, then can there be a case of absolute nullity of assets, in which there is not that culpable negligence which excludes the debtor from the purview of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96? One specious argument against our view has been slightly touched upon by our correspondent, viz. that, if we are right, the statute might be eluded by a debtor retaining an amount of property merely nominal, as it would be difficult to say what amount of dividend the statute intends to be considered assets. The answer to this is, however, that, where there are assets of any amount, the question, whether there has been culpable negligence or not, will be determined by extrinsic evidence; for, though we contend that the total absence of assets is of itself evidence of culpable negligence within the meaning of the statute, and upon its general construction shuts the party out from its protection, it does not follow that there may not be, with assets, that degree of culpable negligence, which will also deprive the applicant of the right to relief.

ON SEEING TO THE APPLICATION OF PURCHASE-MONEY FOR PROPERTY CHARGED WITH THE PAYMENT OF DEBTS AND LEGACIES.

(Concluded from p. 114).

Before we examine the case of Forbes v. Peacock, by the light of the principles thus established, it will be necessary to consider the cases of Watkins v. Cheek, (2 S. & S. 199); Johnson v. Kennett, (6 Sim. 384; 3 My. & K. 630); and Page v. Adams.

In Watkins v. Cheek, a testator charged his real estate with two legacies, of which the payment was deferred, and, subject to the payment of his debts, gave his real and personal estate to his wife absolutely, and appointed her executrix. The widow married S. C., and on her marriage settled the real estate of her first husband to such uses as she should appoint, and, in default of appointment, over. More than sixteen years after the death of the testator, S. C. and his wife executed a mortgage of the devised realty for 4000*l.*, which, in the mortgage deed, was stated to be lent to S. C. for his own use. It was held, that the mortgagee took, subject to the legacies; Sir J. Leach, V. C., referring to the argument, that the charge of debts exonerated the mortgagee, said, "As a general principle, this proposition cannot be questioned. So, a mortgagee or purchaser from the executor of a part of the personal property of the testator has a right to infer that the executor is, in the mortgage or sale, acting fairly in the execution of his duty, and is not bound to inquire as to the debts or legacies. But if the nature of the transaction affords intrinsic evidence that the executor, in the mortgage or sale, is not acting in the execution of his duty, but is committing a breach of trust, as where the consideration of the mortgage or sale is a personal debt due from the executor to the purchaser or mortgagee, then such mortgagee or purchaser, being a party to the breach of trust, does not hold the property discharged from the trusts, but equally subject to the payment of debts and legacies as it would have been in the hands of the executor. The same principle is applicable to real estate; and the question is, whether the transaction in question did not afford intrinsic evidence that the mortgage to the defendant was not made by S. C. and wife in order to pay the charge created on the estate by the will of the testator, but for other purposes, which amounted to a breach of trust."

In Johnson v. Kennett, (6 Sim. 384), a testator gave an annuity to his wife, and legacies to his daughters, and subject thereto, and to the payment of his debts, he gave his real and personal estate to his son, T. K., and appointed him executor. T. K. and his wife made a general conveyance of the real estate to uses to bar dower in favour of himself. He then sold and conveyed the estates in lots to different purchasers. Some of the purchase-deeds recited the will, (omitting the charge of debts), and that T. K. had agreed to give bonds of indemnity against the legacies. To these the widow was a party, releasing her annuity. The rest of the purchase-deeds merely recited the will. To the first class of purchasers bonds of indemnity against the legacies were given; to the others, bonds generally for quiet enjoyment, without reference to the will. There was no evidence to shew that the purchasers knew that the debts had been paid. Sir L. Shadwell held that the purchasers took subject to the legacies, on the ground that the conveyance and fine to uses to bar dower shewed that T. K. was dealing with the estate as owner. He also relied on both the particular and the general bonds as strengthening that inference; (see qu. as to the latter). Lord Lyndhurst reversed this decision on appeal. He said, "The real estate, being in this case charged generally with the payment of debts and legacies, would not, prima facie, in the hands of a purchaser be liable to the payment of the legacies; but it is said, that the debts having been paid, and paid out of the personal estate, and nothing remaining but the legacies, the case falls within the general rule applicable to cases where legacies alone are charged upon the real estate. I find no authority for such a proposition*. The rule applies to the state of things at the death of the testator, and if the debts are afterwards paid, and the legacies alone are left as a charge, that circumstance does not vary the general rule. In this case it does not appear when the debts were paid. * * * * * On the face of the bill the case is the mere general case of real estate charged with the payment of debts and legacies. It is said, that from the nature of the transaction the purchasers must have been aware that the debts were paid, because bonds of indemnity were taken by them against the legacies only, no mention being made of debts. But this is not correct as a general statement, for it appears that some of them mention the legacies only, but some are mere general bonds of indemnity. I lay no stress

* No such proposition was advanced in the argument. The proposition of the counsel for the legatee was, that the rule did not protect a purchaser who knew or had reason to know that the sale was not made for payment of debts.

however on that circumstance, for it does not appear to me, that, if all the bonds of indemnity had been taken against the legacies only, that would at all vary the case. It would have been quite idle to mention the debts in the bonds, because, if there were any debts, it was clear that the parties were indemnified." The principal ground of the Vice-Chancellor's decision, viz. the fact that the prior conveyance to uses to bar dower shewed that the executor was dealing with the estates as his own, was not adverted to by the Lord Chancellor.

In Page v. Adam, (4 Beav. 269), an estate, subject to a charge of debts and legacies, (among which were annuities), was sold under conditions binding the purchaser to make his objections and requisitions within twenty-eight days, and authorising the vendor, "if any such objections were made, and not removed within fourteen days after the expiration of the twenty-eight days herein-named," to annul the contract. The purchaser in due time required that evidence of the discharge of the debts, legacies, and annuities should be given. The vendor satisfied the purchaser on all points except as to the annuities, and on his insisting on having a release of them, declared the contract at an end. On a bill by the purchaser for specific performance, the defendant admitted that the personal estate was more than sufficient to pay the debts, which had been all paid, though not all paid at the time of the sale. He also admitted that the sale had not been made for the purpose of paying debts. Lord Langdale, M. R., in dismissing the bill, said, "The rule as to the exoneration of the purchaser from liability to look to the application of the purchase-money was stated by Lord Lyndhurst (3 My. & K. 631) to be applicable to the state of things at the time of the testator's death; and the particular arrangements which may be made by the executor for the payment of the debts, the term when they may be paid, or the fund out of which they may in the first instance be paid, do not appear to me to vary the effect of the rule." After shewing that there was no difference in the application of the rule between annuities and other legacies, his Lordship proceeded: "I think that the purchaser is not called upon to inquire whether the executors and devisees act properly when they sell the estate, and that it is not incumbent on him to look to the application of the purchase-money." The bill was therefore dismissed, on the ground that the vendor having done all that was incumbent on him to do for the purpose of shewing a good title, and the purchaser having persevered in requiring something more, the contract was properly annulled under the condition for that purpose.

The condition in Page v. Adam may be thought to have referred only to such valid objections and requisitions as the vendor might be unable to meet, but the Master of the Rolls assumed that it also applied to an invalid objection, if the purchaser choose to insist on it, a construction which seems to be more consistent with convenience than with the terms of the condition. But whether this be so or not, it is clear that the decision must have been the same if the objection had been sustainable; and therefore the observations of the Court on the rule of exoneration in case of a charge of debts were altogether extra-judicial.

If, as in Page v. Adam, there were debts unpaid at the time of the contract, but, before the conveyance, the purchaser learns that all the debts have been paid, (whether out of funds not primarily applicable to the purpose or not seems to be perfectly immaterial), it might be contended, that, as the equitable title passed by the contract, the purchaser is entitled to performance, and the executor can give a discharge. It is apprehended that the purchaser might, if he pleased, insist on a specific performance; but whether he could get a discharge from the executor would (before the decision in Forbes v. Peacock, infra) have been very questionable. The difficulty (independently of the doctrine in that case) would have been like that which is experienced upon a purchase under a trust for sale in a settlement, in which the receipt clause has not been inserted. The purchaser takes a good title in the first instance, but he is obliged to see the money re-invested; and, if no suitable purchase can be found, he is unable to complete his contract with safety.

In Forbes v. Peacock, (11 Sim. 152; 12 Sim. 528; 11 Mee. & W. 630; 1 Phill. 717), the testator, after directing payment of his debts, gave the residue of his personal estate and a freehold house to his wife for life, with liberty to sell the house in case a good offer should be made; and, after her death, he directed that the residue of his estate should be collected, and that the house, if not previously sold, should be sold, (without saying by whom), and the proceeds divided amongst certain persons; and he appointed his wife, J. H. F., and R. C. executors and trustees of his will. The widow and J. H. F. proved the will; R. C. died in J. H. F.'s lifetime. The widow died twenty-five years after the testator: after her death J. H. F. sold. The purchaser objected to complete without the concurrence of the cestuis que trust, on the ground that the vendor had no power to sell and give discharges. On demurrer, Sir L. Shadwell held, that the vendor could sell and discharge the purchaser, it not appearing that all the debts were paid; but his Honor subsequently allowed exceptions to the Master's report, on the ground that the Master had refused to allow the defendant to examine the plaintiff on the question, whether all the debts had been paid,—a question which the plaintiff refused to answer. On a case sent to the Exchequer, the Barons had certified that the executor had power to sell whether the debts had been paid or not. After stating the general rule, and the grounds of it, his Honor said, that it did not, in his opinion, extend to exonerate the purchaser, when he is, in effect, informed that the debts have been paid, which information he considered the purchaser to have by the refusal of the executor to say that there were debts still unpaid. "No case has been produced in which it has been decided that the purchaser, knowing that the debts have been paid, is exempt from the necessity of seeing to the application of the purchase-money, except this case of Page v. Adam." The objection being considered to be one of title, the order extended to the dismissal of the bill. But this order was reversed by Lord Lyndhurst, on appeal. His Lordship, after stating the case, said, "The estate being charged in the first instance with the payment of debts, the defendant was not bound, according to the general rule, to see to the application of the purchase-money. If, indeed, he had notice that the vendor intended to commit a breach of trust, and was selling the estate for that purpose, he would, by purchasing under such circumstances, be concurring in the breach of trust, and thereby become responsible. (Watkins v. Cheek, 2 S. & S. 199; Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 151; Eland v. Eland, 4 Myl. & Cr. 429). But, assuming that the facts relied upon in this case amount to notice that the debts had been paid, yet, as the executor had authority to sell, not only for the payment of debts, but also for the purpose of distribution among the residuary legatees, this would not afford any inference that the executor was committing a breach of trust in selling the estate, or that he was not performing what his duty required. The case, then, comes to this:—If authority is given to sell for the payment of debts and legacies, and the purchaser knows that the debts are paid, is he bound to see to the application of the purchase-money? I apprehend not". In the case of Johnson v. Kennett, where it was contended that the rule did not apply, because the debts had been paid before the sale took place, I held that the rule had reference to the death of the testator, and, therefore, that, even supposing the debts were paid before the sale took place, and that the legacies alone remained as a charge, that circumstance would not vary the general rule."

* "I admit, if an executor should sell a term for an under-value, or to one who has notice that there are no debts, this might be another consideration." (Per Sir J. Jekyll, M. R., Ewer v. Corbet, 2 P. Wms. 149).

It does not seem to have been considered, in the above case, that the executor, in refusing to say whether there were debts unpaid or not, might have been merely insisting on the general rule that the purchaser was not concerned in such an inquiry, in which view his refusal could not be deemed to amount to notice that the debts were paid. The learned reporter has the following note to the case:—

"If, notwithstanding this decision, it should still be inferred, from the terms of the dictum in Johnson v. Kennett, that the rule would not apply to a case in which it should happen that there were no debts due at the testator's death, and that the purchaser knew it, I have the authority of Lord Lyndhurst for stating, that he did not intend, on that occasion, to lay down any rule which should govern such a case; and that the guarded and somewhat qualified terms in which the dictum is referred to and adopted in this case were used for the express purpose of excluding that inference. Should it be held that the rule applied to a case of that description, it would seem to follow inevitably (if, indeed, it be not apparent from the current of existing authorities) that the rule is, as was contended by the counsel for the appellants in the principal case, an absolute rule of construction, and not one depending for its application on the state of the testator's affairs either at the time of his death or at any other period. Indeed, it seems difficult to understand how it should ever have been considered otherwise. Balfour v. Welland is an instance in which an absolute power to give discharges for the purchase-money was implied even in a deed, from the nature of the trusts to be performed; and, in cases of the class now under consideration, the implication of a similar power amounts to nothing more than attributing to the mind of the testator a sense of that necessity for the trustees having such a power, where they are directed to pay debts, which the Courts have always acknowledged where there have been debts to be paid."

The case of Balfour v. Welland, (16 Ves. 151), cited by the learned and able reporter in the above note, is certainly a strong authority in favour of the doctrine for which he cites it. In that case, trustees for sale under a deed for the benefit of creditors, were held to be enabled to give a valid discharge for purchase-money, the trust being for the benefit of scheduled creditors and others who might come in within a limited time, which time had elapsed. Sir W. Grant, M. R., said, "that it was not necessary to determine whether, as a general rule, trustees, selling in performance of their duty, could not give a valid discharge for the purchase-money,—for this deed very clearly confers an immediate power of sale for a purpose which cannot be immediately defined, viz. to pay debts which cannot be ascertained until a future and distant period. It is impossible to contend that the trustees might not have sold the whole property at any time they thought fit after the execution of the deed, and yet it could not be ascertained until the end of eighteen months who were the persons among whom the produce of the sale was to be distributed. If the sale might take place at a time when the distribution could not possibly be made, it must have been intended that the trustees should of themselves be able to give a discharge for the produce, for the monies could not be paid to any other person than the trustees. It is not material that the objects of the trust may have been actually ascertained before the sale. The deed must receive its execution as from the moment of its execution. According to the frame of the deed the purchasers were or were not liable to see to the application of the money, and their liability cannot depend upon any subsequent event." His Honor then observed, that the purchaser was necessarily safe in paying the money to the trustees, because the only parties who could be interested in it must have executed the deed, so that they were to be taken as having appointed the trustees to receive the money. But this is the general principle, that the proximate hand to receive must be the hand to discharge,—a principle which is not yet considered as settled. (See Glyn v. Locke, 3 Dru. & W. 11).

Balfour v. Welland does not, however, go to the full extent of the principle which Mr. Phillips, apparently with the sanction of Lord Lyndhurst, would deduce from Forbes v. Peacock. In Balfour v. Welland the trustees were to sell for the benefit of a class which at the time of sale might not be ascertainable, and so selling, were to give discharges. There was only one power of sale, and that for one purpose only. But the doctrine deduced from Forbes v. Peacock is, not merely that trustees selling for the benefit of an unascertained class may give discharges, but that trustees, having two different powers of sale, one for the benefit of an indefinite class, and the other for the benefit of an ascertained class, may, when understood to be exercising the latter power, give discharges, because the capacity of giving discharges is essential to the exercise of the former power. Surely this is not a logical conclusion. A testator who directs his trustees to pay his debts out of his real estate, if necessary, may or may not have considered whether they should have power to give discharges. If it is inferred that he did contemplate their having such power, it can only be on the ground that its possession is essential to the execution of the trust; and it cannot be inferred that he meant to give them any greater authority than would be necessary for that purpose. It can never be necessary for trustees, in selling for payment of debts, to conceal the purpose for which they sell. How then can it be necessary to the working out of a trust for the payment of debts, that the trustees should have power to give discharges when they are avowedly not selling for payment of debts? Watkins v. Cheek and Cubidge v. Boatwright proceeded on the ground that the executor was obviously not dealing with the estate as administrator, i. e. was not acting in that character in which alone he could have given a discharge. Suppose a testator makes specific dispositions of his real and personal estate, subject to a charge of debts, and the executor sells an estate specifically devised, telling the purchaser at the same time that there are no debts to be paid? Can it be pretended that the testator meant that he should have power to discharge the purchaser in such a case? Yet this is the doctrine of Forbes v. Peacock. It can make no difference that a power of sale for a different purpose is superadded. In the case of a power to sell for payment of legacies only, the present doctrine of the Court is understood to be, that the testator has not exonerated the purchaser from seeing to the application of the money,—that it is not sufficient for him to see the money into the hands appointed to receive it. If the purchaser is not exonerated in the case of a charge of legacies only, he cannot on any just reasoning be exonerated, where the case, being originally of a charge of debts and legacies, is reduced to that of a charge of legacies only, by the acknowledged fact that there are no debts. (See Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Kee. 559). An executor, who is also residuary legatee, may sell any specific chattel for payment of debts, and discharge the purchaser, but if he sell or mortgage an existing debt of his own, having at the time assets in his hands for all the pecuniary legacies, and subsequently misapplies those assets, the purchaser or mortgagee will be liable to the legatees. Why? Not because he was party to a breach of trust, for at the time there was none committed or suspected, but simply because the ground of exemption, the professed purpose of paying creditors, did not exist. (Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 152; see Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Kee. 206, supra).

In the above observations, we have assumed that the decision in Forbes v. Peacock proceeded on the principle suggested by Mr. Phillips, viz. that the rule is a rule of construction. The principle, however, on which the judgment is expressed to be founded, is, that the liability of the purchaser depends on the state of things at the testator's death—an expression which also occurs in Johann v. Kennett, Eland v. Eland, and Page v. Adam. We do not attempt any comment on this expression, both because we are utterly unable to guess at its import, and because it appears by the reporter's note, cited above, to have been abandoned by the learned judge with whom it originated.

We shall conclude by stating a case upon which a difficulty recently arose in practice. A testator devised real estate to A. for 1000 years, in trust, by sale or mortgage, to raise money for payment of debts and legacies, and, subject to the term, he gave the estate beneficially to B. and C., whom he appointed executors. A. died in the testator's lifetime, and a purchaser from B. and C. required the concurrence of the executors, on the ground, that though, when no trustee is appointed, the executor has an implied power to execute a trust for the benefit of creditors and legatees, such implication cannot arise where the trust is expressly conferred on another. Conflicting opinions were given on the case. The true difficulty seems to be, that the charge was on a term of years, but the devisees sold the fee simple in possession, thus rendering it impossible to ascertain how much of the purchase-money was bound by the trust. The difference would have been important had the term been of shorter duration. A sale of the term, had the trustee been alive, afforded the only means of getting rid of the trust without the concurrence of the legatees; for a release to the devisees or to a purchaser from them, being an act which could not have been done for the purpose of paying debts, would have afforded no protection against the legatees.

SOLICITORS AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

57, Chancery-lane, London.

REPORT of the DIRECTORS to the SHAREHOLDERS, at the First Annual General Meeting, held at the Gray's Inn Coffee House, on Wednesday, the 31st day of March, 1847.

Your directors have great pleasure in submitting their first annual report, and they congratulate the members on the flourishing condition and prospects of the society.

Your directors have received from the Actuary the following report of the business transacted by this society during the first year:—

TO THE DIRECTORS OF THE SOLICITORS' AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

March 30, 1847.

Gentlemen,—In compliance with your request, I beg to make the following report on the present state and progress of your society since the commencement of business on the 6th day of April, 1846.

Up to the present time 205 policies have been issued, covering assurances to the extent of 113,692l. 11s., and yielding an annual income of 3456l. 12s. 3d.; during the same period two annuities have been granted of the value of 786l. 10s. 2d.

In order, however, to give a better idea of the amount of business which has been submitted to the society, it may be stated that no less than 313 proposals have been made to it for assurances to the extent of 178,864l. 12s., consisting of—

305 proposals which have resulted in policies amounting to .....	£113,692 11 0
18 have been accepted; and are pending completion .....	6374 0 0
—18	130,066 11 0
32 proposals have been accepted; but the policies have not been taken up .....	47,499 1 0
25 have been withdrawn .....
10 still under consideration .....
28 have been declined .....	11,299 0 0

Total 313 proposals for assurance, amounting to ..... £178,864 12 0

This is an amount of business in the first year of the society's existence exceeding that done by the majority of the most successful companies established during the last twenty years.

It will be seen that the average amount assured under each policy is about 560l.

It is gratifying to state that no death has yet happened among the lives assured in the office, which, viewed in connexion with the fact of the large number of proposals declined, shows that due caution has been exercised in not accepting proposals on an inferior class of lives.

It may be remarked, that the large number of 313 proposals has arisen almost wholly from the immediate connexion of the society and its proprietary, without having recourse to advertisements and the other usual means of procuring business.

I have therefore great pleasure in expressing my conviction that with continued skilful management, your society may be expected, at a very early period, to become most advantageous to the assured, and profitable to the proprietary.

I have the honour to be, gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

(Signed) F. G. P. NEISON, Consulting Actuary.

The balance sheet to the 31st December last, as approved by the auditors, has been sent, in pursuance of the statute, to every member of the society, and your directors invite attention to the small expenditure in the establishment of this, as compared with that usually incurred in the formation of similar companies.

Your directors have to state, that, in the allotment of shares, they have been anxious to give to as many members of the legal profession as possible a direct interest in the welfare of the society. Up to this time your directors have allotted 17,385 shares; of these the deposit has been paid on 14,518 shares, and the call on 12,558 shares. It will be seen that the capital thus represented is £37,900l.

Your directors trust that the members will personally exert themselves to make known to their friends in the profession the peculiar advantages of transacting their life assurance business in this office, which are combined with benefits and security to the assured equal to those that can be obtained in any other society.

Your directors have further to state that Messrs. Samuel Edward Donne, John Samuel Martin, De Grenier, De Fontblanque, William Murray, and William Withall, are the directors who retire from office by lot, but, being eligible, offer themselves for re-election, in the terms of the deed of settlement. All the auditors go out of office, and also offer themselves for re-election.

In conclusion, your directors would remind the members of the society that a very large proportion of the business of life assurance is in the hands of solicitors, and that as this society already comprises upwards of 500 members of the legal profession, and which number will be greatly increased by the distribution of the unallotted shares, it needs but the combined efforts of the members to place their society among the most flourishing institutions of the kind in the kingdom.

DEEDS for EXECUTION ABROAD.—Messrs. J. & R. MCCRACKEN, Foreign Agents, 7, Old Jewry, beg to inform the Legal Profession that they undertake to forward Deeds for Execution by Parties Abroad, through their Correspondents on the Continent, for the Acts of Transmission and a simple Commission.

List of Correspondents, and for further information, apply as above. Messrs. J. & R. MCCRACKEN are also Agents to the ROYAL ACADEMY, and devote their attention to the Receipt of Works of Art, Baggage, &c. sent home by Travellers on the Continent for passing through the Custom-house. They also undertake to ship Goods to all Parts of the World.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Established 1824.

In addition to Assurances on Healthy Lives, this Society continues to grant Policies on the Lives of Persons subject to Gout, Asthma, Rupture, and other Diseases, by their paying a Premium in proportion to the increased risk. The plan of granting Assurances on Unhealthy Lives originated with this Office in the beginning of 1834.

Every Description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons, in any Station, and of all Ages.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 322 per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third 328 per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 336 per Cent.; and the future Bonuses are almost certain to exceed that amount.

The Fund accumulated and invested for the Security and Benefit of the Assured, already amounts to £639,787; and the income, which is steadily increasing, is now upwards of £116,000 per Annum.

LONDON, APRIL 10, 1847.

THE question of the game laws takes a prominent place among the numerous legal reforms which have lately been projected. It is a subject of much interest, tracing its origin to the forest laws of feudal times, and yet at the present period exercising its influence over a large portion of the working classes of the country. To shew the extent of this influence, we may refer to the evidence of Mr. Phillips, one of the Secretaries of State, given before the Committee of the House of Commons, appointed in 1845, in which he stated, that, during five years, (1839—1843), game-law convictions were upwards of one-seventh of all the summary convictions in England and Wales. (Welford's Digest of the Evidence, Appendix, p. 60). By returns made to the House of Commons, it appears, that, in 1843, 4259 persons, and in the two years ending on the 1st January, 1846, 11,392 persons, were convicted of poaching. It becomes, therefore, an important consideration to inquire how far laws of so wide an operation are just in themselves or in their administration. We shall confine our observations merely to the legal points of the question, without entering into its social or political bearings.

There are two peculiar features in the present system of the game laws: one is the special protection which has been thrown around animals feræ naturæ; the second is the character of the penalties contained in these enactments, as compared with other laws of a penal nature. With regard to the first feature, animals feræ naturæ and unreclaimed, are not, as is well known, the subject of larceny, and the law relating to trespass not having been considered sufficiently stringent for the preservation of game, numerous and cumulative punishments, varying from imprisonment for three months to transportation for seven years, have been framed for this purpose. Any one may satisfy himself of this fact by turning to the principal statute upon the subject, (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32). By the civil law of Rome, the prohibition as to trespassing upon another man's land was deemed sufficient protection for game: "Feræ bestiarum et volucrum, pisces, capientium fiunt. . . . Nec interest quod ad feras bestias et volucres, utrum in suo quisque fundo capiat in alieno. Plane qui in alienum fundum ingreditur venandi aucupandive gratiâ, potest a domino, si is præveriderit, jure prohiberi, ne ingrediatur." (Digest. 41, ss. 1, 3).

With regard to the second point which we have mentioned, the character of the penalties inflicted, the objections urged are, that they are cumulative, and are unnecessarily severe. By 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, ss. 5, 23, the punishment for taking or killing game, or using any dog, gun, net, or other engine or instrument for searching for or killing game, by a person without a certificate, is a fine not exceeding 5*l.* and costs, or three months' imprisonment and hard labour; but it is expressly provided, that this penalty shall not exempt from payment of the certificate duty, which shall be deemed a cumulative penalty. By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 8, persons sporting without a certificate may be charged with double duty, being the sum of 8*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* A poacher, therefore, may be first imprisoned for three months, and then be further imprisoned "without ball or mainprize, until payment be made of the sum of 8*l.* 1*l.* 8*d.*," which in many cases would be tantamount to a sentence of perpetual imprisonment. By 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, the offence of night-poaching is punishable with imprisonment for three months, and at the expiration of that period the offender is to find sureties, himself in 10*l.* and two sureties in 5*l.* each, for his not re-offending again for a year next following, and, in default of finding such sureties, he is to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for the space of six months. It cannot be denied, that cumulative penalties are opposed to the spirit of the English law, and we believe that this is the only case in which, after a man has undergone punishment for his offence, he is made liable to a further punishment for the want of sureties to prevent a repetition of the offence. The penalty imposed for his deficiency in money or in friends may be twice as long as that imposed for the crime. Captain Williams, one of the inspectors of prisons, in his evidence before the committee, to which we have referred, said, "The cumulative penalties and the peculiarities of these laws, the length of imprisonment, and the severity of punishment, could not fail to strike my observation. (Question 6695). I recollect," he said, "a case at Wakefield. The man was detected on the 22nd November. He was charged with three offences arising out of one: the first charge was a trespass on the 22nd November, (penalty 2*l.*, and costs 12*s.* 6*d.*, or two months' imprisonment); then there was using a gun for the purpose of killing game, on Sunday, the 22nd November, (the same penalty and costs, 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*); the third was using a gun for the purpose of killing game, without a certificate, on the 22nd November, (the same penalty and costs." (6718, 6719). Mr. Phillips said, "By 1 & 2 Will. 4, a poacher, who is convicted for three months as an uncertificated man, is not exempt from the fiscal process; but it is quite clear, from the way in which the returns have been made, that the magistrates have not acted upon it at all with a view to the revenue, but merely as an act of Parliament for the suppression of crime. (6065). It is directly contrary to the principle of the law, that a man should be punished twice for the same offence. (6074). The Game Laws are the severest laws, I will venture to say, in the statute-book; it is impossible to doubt it, I think." (6001).

Much evidence was also given before the committee, as to the mal-administration of this code, and numerous suggestions were made for the remedy of the evils which were alleged to flow from the laws themselves, and the mode of carrying them into effect. Among the principal of these were the removal of all special protection from game, the establishment of a tribunal by which all summary convictions should be tested, the extension of a jury to game cases, and the abolition of certificates.

We believe, that, if the laws relating to game were struck out of the statute-book altogether, the existing code would be found quite sufficient for the protection of property of every kind. The legal remedy given for a wilful trespass would still remain. If, however, this should be considered ineffectual, it would be easy to enact that game should be the subject of larceny, and thus to bring these offences into analogy with other offences against property.

MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed James Trevor, Gent., of Bridgewater, in the county of Somerset, to be a Master Extraordinary in the high Court of Chancery.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Richard Pidcock, of Woolwich, in the county of Kent, Gent., to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Kent.

Of whom may be had,

In 2 vols. royal 12mo., price 1*l.* 15s. boards, the FIFTH EDITION of GRANT'S CHANCERY PRACTICE, composed anew, and according to all the existing Operative Orders of Court, including the last of 8th May, 1845.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 6*l.* 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 3 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superceding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Note.

COLLYER'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

Second Edition, greatly enlarged.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW OF PARTNERSHIP, (including Partnerships in Mines, Joint-Stock Companies, and Ships), with an Appendix of Forms. By JOHN COLLYER, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

FINLASON'S LEADING CASES ON PLEADING.

Just published, in royal 8vo., price 12s. boards.

A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES ON PLEADING, AND PARTIES TO ACTIONS; with Practical Notes, elucidating the Principles of Pleading, (as exemplified in Cases of most frequent occurrence in Practice), by a reference to the earliest Authorities; and designed to assist both the Practitioner and Student. By W. FINLASON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Special Pleader.

"The Notes themselves are learned, and we may add, elaborate Treatises upon the matters to which they relate. . . . The frequent reference to the very fountain heads of the Law,—the Year Books and the older Reports,—honourably distinguishes these Notes."—Law Magazine, No. 10, N. S., February, 1847.

"Mr. Finlason has displayed great learning in the Notes, and we heartily commend his volume to the careful and repeated perusal of every law student; and it will doubtless be found a useful addition to the Library of the practising Pleader, who may often advantageously refresh his memory with it."—Law Times, 30th January, 1847.

PRINCIPLES OF THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, intended as a First Book for the Use of Students in Conveyancing. By JOSHUA WILLIAMS, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"Decidedly superior to any of its predecessors. . . . A Work with which no Common-law Student should neglect to provide himself at the outset of his Pupilage."—Warren's Law Studies, pp. 560, 766.

"The want which the Student has felt, of an Elementary Guide to the Law of Real Property as it exists, and as it is practically important at the present day, Mr. Williams (who was already favourably known to the Profession by an edition of Watkins's Treatise on Descents, published in 1837) has endeavoured to supply by his present Work, and, we think, with eminent success. . . . He has developed his plan with great clearness of method, in a lively and agreeable style."—Jurist.

"In many important respects, a decided improvement upon its predecessors; and when the names of some of these are remembered, we think, that, in expressing this opinion, we are passing no slight praise upon Mr. Williams's book."—Law Magazine.

"Of considerable use and merit. . . . It appears to us written in a pleasing and agreeable style, and well calculated to make a favourable impression on the Student."—Law Review.

Price 1s. 6d. sewed.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By RO-BERT PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of nisi prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, common, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs, as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 28th, 1846.

COOTE'S ECCLESIASTICAL PRACTICE.

Just published, in 1 thick vol. 8vo., price 11. 8s. boards.

THE PRACTICE OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS, with FORMS and TABLES of COSTS. By HENRY CHARLES COOTE, Proctor in Doctors' Commons, &amp;c.

"The excellent arrangement of the ample materials which he had at command is one of its greatest merits, especially as a work of reference."

—Law Magazine.

"This work was much needed, and we think it has been ably executed."

—Legal Observer.

"This is a well timed and well executed publication. A more acceptable compilation, to country solicitors especially, it is difficult to conceive."

"Ecclesiastical Practice is now for the first time made the subject of a formal and elaborate treatise, and it has remained for Mr. Coote, by a combination of industry and experience, to give to the profession a work which has long been wanted, but which so few are competent to supply."

—Law Times.

SCRIVEN ON COPYHOLDS.—FOURTH EDITION.

Just published, 2 vols. royal 8vo., price 2l. 10s. boards.
A TREATISE ON COPYHOLD, CUSTOMARY FREEHOLD, and ANCIENT DEMESNE TENURE; with the jurisdiction of Courts Baron and Courts Leet; also an Appendix, containing Rules for holding Customary Courts, Courts Baron and Courts Leet, Forms of Court Rolls, Deputations, and Copyhold Assurances, and Extracts from the relative Acts of Parliament. By JOHN SCRIVEN, Serjeant at Law. The Fourth Edition, embracing all the authorities to the present period, by HENRY STALMAN, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

"This treatise is one of great practical utility, not a little enhanced by the care, industry, and ability with which the present editor, Mr. Stalman, has enriched and enlarged the original work."

"This is a careful revision of a very valuable standard work."

—Legal Observer.

"Mr. Stalman, the editor of the present edition, has effected considerable improvements by the application of great industry guided by sound judgment."

—Law Times.

SHELFORD ON THE LAW OF RAILWAYS.—SECOND EDITION.

1 thick vol. 12mo. price 21s. boards.

The LAW OF RAILWAYS; including the THREE GENERAL CONSOLIDATION ACTS, 1845, and the other General Acts for Regulating Railways in England and Ireland, with Copious Notes of Decided Cases; also the PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT RESPECTING RAILWAY BILLS, with Forms, &c. Second Edition, considerably enlarged. By LEONARD SHELFORD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"This book, like every thing else Mr. Shelford undertakes, is admirably executed and indispensable to the profession. The new cases are all carefully noted in their proper places in this new edition."

—Law Magazines.

MR. SERJEANT STEPHEN'S NEW COMMENTARIES.

Completes in 4 vols. 8vo. price 4l. 10s. cloth.

NEW COMMENTARIES on the LAWS of ENGLAND, in which are interwoven, under a new and original arrangement of the general subject, all such parts of the work of BLACKSTONE as are applicable to the present times; together with full but compendious expositions of the modern improvements of the law up to the close of last session; the original and adopted materials being throughout the work typographically distinguished from each other. By HENRY JOHN STEPHEN, Serjeant at Law.

CONTENTS OF THE FIRST VOLUME:—Introduction. Book I. OF PERSONAL RIGHTS. Book II. OF RIGHTS OF PROPERTY: Part I. As to Things Real.

CONTENTS OF THE SECOND VOLUME:—Book II. Part I. As to Things Real (continued). Part II. As to Things Personal. Book III. OF RIGHTS IN PRIVATE RELATIONS. Book IV. OF PUBLIC RIGHTS.—Part I. Of the Civil Government.

CONTENTS OF THE THIRD VOLUME:—Book IV. Part I. Of the Civil Government (continued). Part II. Of the Church. Part III. Of the Social Economy of the Realm. Book V. OF CIVIL INJURIES.

CONTENTS OF THE FOURTH VOLUME:—Book V. OF CIVIL INJURIES (continued). Book VI. OF CRIMES—Of the Nature of Crimes and their Punishments; Of the Rise, Progress, and Gradual Improvement of the Laws of England. General Index.

"Great expectations had been entertained of the merits of this new and greater work by the author of what the Law Student of the present day is accustomed, and justly so, to look up to as almost a perfect work—the Treatise on the Principles of Pleading; and as far as those expectations were founded on the positive evidence of capacity which the smaller one furnished, they have in no way been disappointed."

—Law Magazine.

CRABB'S CONCISE PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING.—

THIRD EDITION.

2 thick vols. royal 8vo. price 3l. boards.

A COMPLETE SERIES OF PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING and of COMMON and COMMERCIAL FORMS, in alphabetical order, adapted to the Present State of the Law and Practice of Conveyancing, with copious Prefaces, Observations, and Practical Notes on the several Deeds. To which are added the latest Real Property Acts, with Notes, and the Decisions thereon. The Third Edition, revised and greatly enlarged. By GEORGE CRABB, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

"This Work, which embraces both the Principles and Practice of Conveyancing, contains likewise every description of Instrument wanted for Commercial purposes."

"Crabb's Precedents are already well known to the Profession. Two editions have been exhausted in a very short period, a decisive proof of the estimation in which they are held, and how useful and satisfactory they have been found in practice. The Third Edition, just published, presents a multitude of improvements, giving to it almost the value of a new work."

—Law Times.

Henry Butterworth, Law Bookseller and Publisher, 7, Fleet-street.

JAGOE ON THE SMALL DEBTS ACT.

Second Edition, containing the Rules of Practice and Forms, with an Index, price 6s. boards.

THE PRACTICE OF THE COURTS under the 9 & 10 Vict. cap. 95, for the RECOVERY of SMALL DEBTS in ENGLAND; with Notes, Comments, and Decisions on analogous Statutes. By JOHN JAGOE, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"The several sections of the act are explained and commented upon wherever there appears any necessity for explanation or comment. The work is a useful contribution to the new system for administering justice to the great bulk of the people."

—Times.

LONDON, APRIL 17, 1847.

As the county courts are extremely likely to effect a very great revolution in the transaction of the legal business of the country, we shall consider it a part of our duty to observe from time to time upon the mode in which the intention of the statute is attempted to be worked out, by the course of proceeding adopted in them. And first, with regard to a point on which it is most material to the future working of the county courts, that a right view should be taken, viz. the attendance of members of the legal profession. On this, we think, a considerable misapprehension is entertained in the public mind, as to the general intention of the Legislature. It appears to be assumed, that the intention of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, is positively and actively to exclude, as far as possible, the employment of professional men; whereas the intention is, we apprehend, merely to enable the parties, as far as possible, to dispense, if they desire it, with professional assistance; but not to interpose any difficulty in their way if they desire to engage such assistance.

The proceedings which took place on the opening of one of the metropolitan county courts, shew that a difficulty has already arisen in reconciling the interests of these two parties,—those who wish, and those who do not wish, to avail themselves of professional assistance. On the one hand, the professional men claim priority of hearing, on the ground of the injury to them by the loss of their time, if causes are taken in any order which may place them under the necessity of attending, perhaps, for a whole day, upon a cause which, though low in the paper, may be brought on early in the day; or may not come on at all. On the other hand, the parties who exercise their undoubted right to appear in person, contend that they ought not to be postponed for the convenience either of other suitors, or of counsel or solicitors. The judge, in the case alluded to, expressed no opinion on the claim put forward, but merely stated his willingness to receive any proposals for an arrangement that should be convenient to all parties.

Now, with regard to the claim of the bar and the solicitors to priority of audience, we do not see how it can be sustained. Of course, we throw out of consideration any such idea as that of there being any right in either counsel or solicitors, on their own account, to claim precedence in the county courts. In the superior courts, they only claim and exercise such right on the ground of public convenience, and, even if they could, or ought at all to set up any such right, in the absence of legislative provision, it is clear that the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, does not, at any rate, recognise it in regard to the county courts. There can be no question that the spirit as well as the letter of the statute, is not to give any advantage to those parties who choose to employ professional men, beyond the advantage of their advice and skill; not, in fact, to lay upon suitors any pressure or inducement tending to make them retain professional assistance, but to leave it entirely to themselves to do so, or not to do so, at their own discretion.

Any regulation, therefore, tending to give to the suitor who engages solicitors or counsel to appear for him, any collateral advantage (which priority of audience undoubtedly would) over the suitor who thinks fit to appear in person, is clearly hostile to the spirit of the act.

On the other hand, if some regulation is not made by which professional men may be assured of the time when the cases they are engaged in will be heard, so that, attending punctually, they may dispose of their business at once, and go; it is quite obvious that no professional man in either branch, of character and ability, will be induced to attend courts ~~regularly~~ amount of professional remuneration is so restricted, that clearly it can only prove an adequate return, if no time is consumed but that which is consumed in disposing of business. To deprive parties in effect, by not providing for this state of things, of their right of appearing by professional men, would be as unjust and as hostile to the spirit of the statute, as an opposite course of proceeding.

But it would, we apprehend, be very practicable to make arrangements which should reconcile these and other conflicting rights, and carry fully into effect the intention of the act. Certain days, or certain portions of a day, in a district where the business is light, might be set apart for particular classes of business. Thus the undefended list might be taken regularly for one or more hours at the sitting of the court, on every day on which it sits. Defended causes, where either party appears in person, might be taken on certain other days, or between certain given hours; and defended causes, in which both parties appear by counsel or solicitors, might be taken on certain other days, or at certain other hours of the day. Some inconveniences might arise from any arrangement depending on classification of business. As, for instance, causes might occasionally be interrupted and stand over to the inconvenience of the parties; or greater delay might be sometimes thus interposed in the hearing of particular causes, than by the system of taking causes in the mere order of their entry. But still if such, or some equivalent, classification of business would not produce perfect inconveniences, and would, we conceive, be at any rate far superior to, and more just than, either the primæval and barbarous arrangement of mere rotation on the plaintiff, or the equally simple, though perhaps more unfair one, of giving precedence to a particular class of suitors; against both of which we protest, as being contrary to the intention of the Legislature, and having regard to the objects of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, likely to work injustice to suitors.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE DOCTRINE OF INSANITY, AS APPLIED TO THE CAPACITY TO MAKE A WILL.

A case has lately been decided in the Prerogative Court (Frere v. Peacock, 11 Jur. 247) which calls for much observation. We will not at present go so far as to say, that the decision cannot be law, but we will say this, that, if it is law, the law is greatly behind the age, and requires alteration. The case referred to was one of invalidity of a will, on the ground of insanity in the testator. The facts appear to have been rather complicated, and the evidence very voluminous; but the single question of law arising out of all the mass of facts before the Court was this, whether what is now termed moral insanity, is such insanity as will avoid a will made by a person under its influence.

The marginal note of the reporter, which very correctly represents the substance of the decision, is this: "Moral insanity or a moral perversion of the feelings, unaccompanied with delusion, does not afford a sufficient ground to invalidate and nullify the acts of one so affected, if no fraud is practised upon him, and his eccentricity cannot be resolved into intellectual insanity, the test of which is delusion." In the judgment occur these passages:—"I am of opinion that perversion of moral feeling does not constitute unsoundness of mind, so as to render an act performed invalid per se. . . . I am of opinion, and I think, bound to declare that opinion, that no insane delusions are proved to have existed in his mind. There is, perhaps, an unfounded dislike to his sister and other members of his family, but it is not an insane dislike. It is not founded upon circumstances of the non-existence of which it was impossible in any way to satisfy him, with respect to the conduct of his sister and their relations. . . . I think moral insanity has not been admitted into the courts of this country, to subvert the will of a person who has his intellectual faculties about him, who gives instructions for the preparation of his will in his own handwriting, who has those instructions approved by his solicitor, and executes the instrument in the manner directed, not, however, in the presence of his solicitor, for he was a man whose mind was not constituted like other persons, and did not do his business as others generally do; but still, in a manner that by no means infers insanity or unsoundness. The general position I lay down is, that insane delusion is a test by which the soundness or unsoundness of mind of a particular individual is to be considered."

So, that the burthen of the judgment is this, that, to establish such insanity as will avoid a will, you must shew that there were insane delusions in the mind of the testator.

We are not going to dispute this doctrine; but we say, that, in laying down such a rule, nothing is in fact laid down, because the question remains undisposed of, what is insane delusion? When the Court says, that not moral perversion, but only intellectual perversion, is insanity within the meaning of the law, the doctrine is more intelligible, and more definite; but, with great submission, we contend, that it is also more obviously wrong; and the fallacy we conceive lies in attempting a fundamental distinction between moral and intellectual perversion.

The time has long since passed when men considered the intellect to reside in the brain, and the sentiments in the heart. It is now thoroughly understood that the heart is nothing whatever but a machine, in the nature of a pump, wherewith the blood is circulated through the system, and that whatever may be the mind, as an independent and immaterial power, (as to which we know absolutely nothing), the material organ of the body through which its manifestations of every kind are made, is the brain. Some metaphysicians make, it is true, a distinction between the intellect and the sentiments, as two different departments of the mind, but both are understood to be exhibitions or manifestations of the mind. When, therefore, defining insanity to mean, (as it is defined and understood to mean), a morbid state of what we term the mind, it is said, that perversion of the intellect only is insanity; if by the intellect is meant only that faculty of the mind, by which knowledge of the external world is acquired, then we say that the doctrine is not sustainable; because it assumes to com-fine the functions of the mind, to what is in fact only one branch of its functions. We might, perhaps, go further, and say, that even supposing mind and intellect to be wholly equivalent terms, in other words, supposing that nothing is within the sphere of mental operation but that which is an object of intellect, and that consequently there can be no insanity except where there is a perversion of the intellect or understanding; even then it might be contended that the subjects on which the moral sense exercises itself, are objects of intellect; that to distinguish between moral right and moral wrong; to appreciate (we adopt the very words of Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, ante, p. 252) duly the acts or feelings which influence mankind generally, is as much a matter of intellect or understanding, as to distinguish between gold and silver; to appreciate the value of rights of property; or to understand the signification of legal phrases and instruments. We are all too much in the habit of applying rashly the words, feeling, sentiment, instinct, and so forth; and to talk of a man feeling that such an action is right, in contradistinction to his understanding some piece of material knowledge, forgetful that what we term feeling and instinct, are, so far as we can judge, only the result of very rapid combinations of ideas, generating as a result, an understanding that a particular thing is, or that a particular consequence will follow given acts. But, however this may be, whether the affections and sentiments of mankind are within the sphere of intellect or not, or whether they are a separate class of mental manifestations; thus much is at least now generally believed, that they are of the mind, as much as what is commonly called intellect. How, then, can it be said that moral perversion is not mental perversion? And if it be mental perversion, how can it be said that it is not insanity?

But to turn back to the question of insane delusion, let us consider a little what is meant by insane delusion. The definitions of "insane delusion," to be collected from the cases, are, that it is "some particular erroneous conviction impressed upon the understanding." (See the passages quoted by the Court, ante, p. 250). "It is only a belief of facts which no rational person would believe—that is insane delusion*." (Dew v. Clark, 3 Add. 90).

In Dew v. Clark, where the attempt was to shew insanity, by reason of the dislike of the testator to his daughter, the Court said, "She must understand, that no course of harsh treatment, no sudden bursts of violence, no display of unkind, or even unnatural feeling merely, can avail, in proof of her allegation. She can only prove it by making out a case of antipathy clearly resolvable into mental perversion, and plainly indicating that the testator was insane as to her, notwithstanding his general sanity." Now, we might stop to complain of the vagueness of the language used even in this celebrated judgment; because, after all, what the Court says amounts to this, that no amount of manifestation of dislike, unless it amounts to an insane dislike,—an antipathy without any rational foundation,—will suffice to shew insanity; in other words, unless the antipathy is manifestly insane, it is not a mark of insanity. But we will not dwell upon this defect of the definition, and will take it as it is; and we contend, that, consistently with the doctrine of Dew v. Clark, moral perversion is as much an evidence of insanity as intellectual perversion: in other words, that he who continually mistakes a moral duty,—he who manifests the continual existence or absence of a sentiment, under circumstances which would not, with the generality of mankind, produce such a sentiment, or its absence, as the case may be,—falls strictly within the same class as he who believes a fact upon evidence, which would not be evidence of it to the rest of the world. If I contract and manifest a permanent antipathy to my own child, without any assignable cause, it is said that would not, in law, be an insane antipathy. If, without any assignable cause, I continually torture any living creature, again, it would, no doubt, be said, that is not evidence of insanity. Why? Because, it is said, there is no delusion. But, if I hate my own child, because, without any adequate grounds of belief, I believe her to desire and intend my death, that, it is admitted, is insane delusion. So, if I persisted in dissecting living animals, under the belief that they were machinery, and that I was merely taking machinery to pieces, that, again, it would be admitted, is insane delusion. Why? Because, in these cases, as put, there is, in the one case, a belief of a very improbable fact upon evidence which would not induce that belief in the majority of minds; and, in the other, a taking of visible things for that which no one else takes them for. But the only difference between the two classes of cases is, that, in the one, we are dealing with things more visible and palpable than in the other.

If it be recognised, that affection for offspring is a general sentiment of mankind, or that, in the absence of some ground for anger or irritation, it is not natural for men to inflict pain upon other living creatures, then, if we find an individual acting in a manner diametrically opposite to these general convictions, and evincing hatred to his offspring, or cruelty to any other living creatures, without any of those motives without which it is admitted that mankind generally do not do such acts, is it not logical to say, that such an individual is under an insane delusion; in this sense, that he believes in rights, or disbelieves in duties, without any of those motives which would induce in mankind generally such belief or disbelief?

CIRCUITS OF THE COMMISSIONERS FOR THE RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS.

SUMMER CIRCUITS, 1847.

WILLIAM JOHN LAW, Esq., Commissioner.

Norfolk, at Norfolk Castle, Tuesday, June 29.

At the City of Norwich, on the same day, instead of Wednesday, 30th June, as heretofore appointed.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—William Pinney, Esq., for the county of Somerset, (Eastern Division), in the room of William Gore Langton, Esq., deceased.

* This, it may be observed en passant, is reasoning in a circle. It amounts to saying, that insane delusion is the belief of an insane person, which nobody can deny.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, April 13.

Mr. Walpole moved for and obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Law for the Registration of Persons entitled to Vote in the Election of Members to Serve in Parliament for England and Wales, pursuant to the suggestions contained in the report of the committee on votes of electors. The chief purpose of the bill was to prevent the wholesale system of raising objections to voters, and this, it was proposed to do, by giving to all bona fide electors the right of retaining their names on the register, which it was sought to accomplish by the imposition of a heavy penalty on the objector, who without good and probable cause objected to the vote. Another part of the bill would go to take away all objections founded upon mere technical grounds; and another object was, that of facilitating the purification of the electoral lists, by giving to the bona fide objector increased means of effecting that purpose, at the same time that his power should be so restricted as not to admit of his acting vexatiously or injuriously towards the elector.

Mr. Hume moved to bring in a bill to establish taxation of costs on private bills in the House of Commons. The bill which he had been requested to propose, was for the purpose of giving to the Speaker of the House the same power as the Lord Chancellor possessed in the Court of Chancery, by which a scale of fees was framed, and an officer appointed to tax the bills of all those who chose to submit to such taxation. The Committee on Private Bills had recommended, as a general rule, that all bills of costs should be necessarily taxed, and that all bills should be taxed before any persons were called on to pay any part of the expenses. The hon. member then cited from the appendix to the report of last sessions various cases to shew how enormous the parliamentary expenses were, and stated, that had all the bills been submitted to taxation, there would have been a very considerable reduction in the amount.

Leave was then given to bring in the bill.

Thursday, April 16.

Mr. Hume asked whether, as there was now a vacancy in the office of a Master in Chancery, her Majesty's Government were about to make any alterations according to the plan entertained by the commissioners appointed in 1842, viz. by abolishing the office of Master in Chancery altogether, and by appointing additional judges in each court? He wished to know whether the present vacancy would be filled up, or whether, in consequence of such vacancy, such changes would be made in the Court of Chancery as would be beneficial to the suitors.

Lord J. Russell answered, that the Lord Chancellor having turned his deliberate attention to the subject, and having considered that when the Equity Exchequer was abolished an additional Master was appointed, had come to the conclusion that the arrangement of the duties was such that it was not now necessary to appoint a Master in lieu of the one who had recently resigned, and therefore it was not intended by her Majesty's Government to appoint a Master to fill the vacancy which now existed. His Lordship added, with reference to alterations in the Masters' offices, that the subject had engaged the attention of the Lord Chancellor, and he had under his consideration reforms of considerable importance.

LONDON, APRIL 24, 1847.

A CASE of some importance to the commercial world has lately been decided by the Court of Exchequer, (Pott v. Cleg, ante, 11 Jur. p. 289), to the effect that money deposited with a banker in the usual way by a customer is money lent, and that, therefore, the debt is liable to be barred by the Statute of Limitations, if not acknowledged within six years. As, however, the learned Chief Baron expressed doubt upon this doctrine, the decision may be considered as still open to observation, and it certainly appears to us to be, upon principle, any thing but satisfactory.

The case of Pott v. Cleg contained, as almost all cases do in practice, many elements besides the mere question of principle, whether money deposited with a banker is money simply lent, and, therefore, many of the cases cited do not specially affect that consideration. But some of the cases cited to shew that the Statute of Limitations applies to the debt of a banker to his customers, do not, as we humbly submit, shew any such thing. They shew that money lodged with a banker is a debt of some sort, but by no means as a necessary consequence that it is a debt within the statute. Carr v. Carr, (1 Mer. 541, notis), was a case of construction of a will, in which the question was, whether, under a bequest of whatever debts might be due to the testator, money at his banker's passed, and it was held that it did; that it was not a mere depositum; that it would support a commission of bankruptcy; that it would not pass by the description of ready money; that, upon these and other grounds, it must be considered as a debt, and must pass by that description.

In Steech's case in Devaynes v. Noble, (1 Mer. 539), the point was, whether the customer of a firm of bankers, having money in their hands at the death of one of them, did not, by continuing the money in the hands of the survivors, and drawing upon such survivors, constitute them exclusive depositaries of the monies, and so acquit the estate of the deceased partner; and it was held, that such was not the effect of the customer's conduct. Upon this point the following observations were made by the Court:—"It is supposed that there is a considerable difference between the case of bankers and that of any other partnership, and that it is impossible for the creditors of a banking shop to permit their money to remain in the hands of the surviving partners for such a space as eight months, (indeed, the argument went to eight days, or even to a shorter period), without recognising those surviving to be the depositaries of the balance due, and, therefore, exclusively responsible to make what is called the deposits forthcoming. There is a fallacy in likening the dealings of a banker to the case of a deposit, to which, in legal effect, they have no sort of resemblance. Money paid into a banker's becomes immediately a part of his general assets, and he is merely a debtor for the amount. Therefore, when a man lodges money with a partnership of bankers, he is as much concerned to look to the solvency of each particular partner as if he was lending the money to any other partnership. The money in each case equally ceases to be his the moment he has parted with it, and he has only to trust for the return of it to the solvency of the persons into whose hands it passes; but he has in each case alike the credit and the responsibility of all the partners of the firm. Then, when one partner dies, what is to be inferred from the mere circumstance of allowing the debt upon the banking account to remain uncalled for, in the hands of the surviving partners, beyond what would be inferred from not immediately calling in any debt due by the surviving partners in any other trade, where money had been advanced or lent to that partnership? The security is permitted to stand just as it did, the party doing nothing to alter it. There is no novatio debiti—no new contract—no relinquishment of the old security, whatever it may, either in law or equity, be defined to be.”

Now, the result of these two cases is merely that a banker is the debtor of his customer in some sense. But so is a trustee of money, the debtor of his cestui qua trust, in some sense; among others, in this—that if he commits a breach of trust, and becomes bankrupt, the cestui qua trust would prove against his estate for the amount of the trust-fund, as a creditor, and no more.

Foley v. Hill (1 Phil. 399) is undoubtedly a direct decision against the view that we are taking, for in that case Lord Lyndhurst says, “It is quite clear that a banker is not to be considered a trustee for his customer, in the legal sense of the term.” But it may be observed in this case that, firstly, the cases of Carr v. Carr and Devaynes v. Noble, on which his Lordship relies, were not discussed in the arguments; and, secondly, that none of the authorities cited contra in Pott v. Cleg, were brought before his notice. The remarkable passage in Pothier, (Vol. 2, p. 126), cited in Pott v. Cleg, which is a strong authority against Foley v. Hill, might, it would appear, from the observations of Rolfe, B., in Pott v. Cleg, have materially affected the decision in that case, but that the question could not properly be entertained in the state in which the pleadings placed the case before the Court. In this state of things the authority of Foley v. Hill is much weakened, and the question may, perhaps, be considered as quite concluded by authority.

Upon principle, the real question is, not whether the money paid into a banker's is a mere deposit or a debt, for a debt it clearly is of some kind, but whether it is a debt such as will attract the operation of the statute, or whether it is a debt in the nature of a trust debt, or otherwise coupled with some special implied contract, or possessing some unavoidable attributes inconsistent with its being barred by the statute.

The fact, that a banker employs the customer's money, whereas a mere trustee may not, would not shew that the money has become the banker's, as in the case of an ordinary debt. The employment of the money by the banker is of a limited kind, and is not an employment that he makes in his own right as owner, but a limited employment made by virtue of an implied contract, that he shall be paid for his pains and trouble in keeping the money always ready to be paid, by enjoying the interest of it. We confess, that, to us, it appears that the relation of banker and customer is much more like that of principal and agent, as to which it would not be pretended that money received by the agent on account of his principal, would constitute a debt, barrable by lapse of time, though it clearly would form a debt. (Earl of Hardwicke v. Vernon, 14 Ves. 504, and see p. 510).

Where money is lent simply, there is an intention to part with the ownership, and there is a complete parting with the ownership; and the money is always in theory, and mostly in reality, lent upon the terms of the debtor paying interest to the amount of its actual value. At any rate, the idea of paying to any person the interest of money as a consideration for simply borrowing it, is quite inconsistent with all established notions of the relation of borrower and lender, debtor and creditor. And herein does consist, in fact, the substantial distinction between the nature of the debt of a banker to his customer, and of an ordinary debtor to his creditor. The banker receives, or is permitted to use, the interest of the money as his own, as a consideration for his safely keeping the money, and being always at a moment's notice ready to pay it; and by the implied terms of the contract, he is clearly not at liberty to expend or use the principal, except merely by safely investing it. On the contrary, the mere debtor pays interest for the use of the principal, which, pending the relation of lender and borrower, he is, by the very terms of the contract, to use for his own purposes.

The same, except Foley v. Hill, which, as we have seen, was decided in the absence of very material authorities, only decide that a banker is not a mere depository, so as to exclude the quality of debtor; but they do not decide that he is not a debtor and something more; and we submit, that, looking at the implied contract between banker and customer—looking at the great distinction we have pointed out between a person who borrows money for his own purposes, and a person with whom the owner of money deposits it for safe custody, combined with continual accessibility; and considering, that, in Pott v. Cleg, the state of the pleadings shut out of consideration a very important authority, it must be concluded, that, although it is quite clear that a banker is the debtor of his customer, and not a mere depository, it is not so clear that he is not a debtor in the nature of a trustee; and it is, at any rate, very clear that the doctrine of Foley v. Hill, and so far as Pott v. Cleg supports it, of the latter case, is very inconsistent with the general understanding of men of business as to the relation between banker and customer.

LONDON, MAY 1, 1847.

A case involving a point of some interest, as regards medical jurisprudence, occurred at the last Liverpool Assizes. The facts were as follow:—

Elizabeth Johnson was charged with the wilful murder of her husband, by administering arsenic. The deceased, who, at the time of his death, was in the forty-second year of his age, was described as being a very healthy man, and, as one of the witnesses said, had never been known to suffer a day's illness in his life. After partaking of supper on the evening of Thursday, the 26th November, he was seized with vomiting, and complained of severe thirst, and of pain in the bowels, together with heat in the throat. Having remained in a very weak condition for some days, he died on the 3rd December. On the 4th December, the day after his death, a post mortem examination was made by a surgeon, who at the trial described the viscera as being generally healthy, that the internal surface of the stomach was highly injected; the same appearances were presented throughout the alimentary canal; the lips were excoriated, the gullet and bladder much inflamed, and the lungs of an unusually red or scarlet colour. The surgeon stated that these appearances might arise from any irritant cause, but he had never met with them as the result of natural causes, and that arsenic would, in his opinion, produce such symptoms. The witness also stated that he thought arsenic was in the body. The other medical man, who attended the examination, upon subjecting the intestines to Reinsch's test, obtained a slight film on the copper, but so slight that he could not say what it was.

Thus, the medical evidence, up to this period, remained in a very unsatisfactory state. However, the body, after having lain for some period in the ground, was, in consequence of some facts that transpired in the interim, exhumed in the early part of March, when a large portion of the internal parts of the stomach and the heart was subjected to Marsh's test. The result was a metallic deposit on a piece of cold porcelain, which was found to be discharged by the action of chloride of lime. By another process a yellow precipitate was produced.

From these appearances the medical men concluded, that there was arsenic in the body, but not sufficient to have produced death. According to the evidence of one gentleman, the matter tested did not amount to the one thousandth part of a grain. It was proved in evidence, first, that the prisoner purchased arsenic; secondly, that she had been heard to express threats against her husband; thirdly, that, both by Marsh's and Reinsch's tests, arsenic was found in the body.

Under these circumstances, we should not have been surprised had the jury returned a verdict against the prisoner, although the quantity of arsenic found might not have been sufficient to cause death, inasmuch as the deceased might have got rid of a portion of it by the violent vomiting which preceded his death. Much reliance, however, was placed upon the smallness of the quantity found; and, in addition to this, the learned judge, in summing up, suggested, that, as it was well known that arsenic was contained in many substances, and might be extracted therefrom, there was a possibility that, during the interval between the first and second exhumation of the body, owing to the grave where the body was placed containing a great deal of water, (as appeared in evidence), the poison discovered might be attributed to this cause.

We confess we are inclined to think this a strange theory, and one approaching very near to the circumstances endeavoured to be established in the case of Tawell, in which apple pips were suggested as the medium of arsenic, and cause of death. In the princial case, however, to which we are alluding, the suggestion was more successful, and the jury acquitted the prisoner.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

To justices at sessions for the county of Middlesex to award compensation to the sheriff in lieu of gaol fees, under the stat. 55 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 10, the Court holding that they had jurisdiction by the act to do so. (Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 3 B. & Ad. 100). To allow a person, on behalf of the rate payers, to inspect and take copies of the last two county rates, and of all orders of sessions made for the expenditure of the same, and other documents relating thereto. (Reg. v. The Justices of Leicester, 4 B. & C. 891; S. C., 7 D. & R. 370; but see Reg. v. The Justices of Staffordshire, 6 Adol. & Ell. 84, and Reg. v. The Justices of Nottingham, 3 Id. 500, semb. contr.). It seems that, previous to granting the writ, an application for inspection must be made to the justices assembled at quarter sessions, or the rate will be refused. To make up a record of the proceedings upon an indictment in order to enable a defendant to plead autrefois convict to another indictment for the same offence. (Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 5 B. & Adol. 1113). To allow the costs of maintenance upon an appeal against an order of removal under the 9 Geo. 1, c. 7, s. 9. (Reg. v. The Justices of Monmouthshire, 12 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 126). Where an order of filiation was applied for against the putative father of a bastard child, and the application was resisted in limine, on the ground, that, by a local act of Parliament, certain persons were incorporated for the management of the poor, and that the application should have been made by them, and not by the churchwardens and overseers; the Court of quarter sessions, being of that opinion, made no order of filiation, but refused to order that the costs of the alleged putative father should be paid by the churchwardens and overseers. The Court, however, considered that the churchwardens and overseers were liable to pay these costs, and granted a mandamus to compel the Court of quarter sessions to make an order for their payment. (Reg. v. The Recorder of Exeter, 13 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 7). Such application and dismissal is a sufficient hearing of the application within 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 73. (Ib.)

If justices at sessions reject an application in the exercise of the discretion vested in them by the Legislature, the Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere; but if they reject it on the ground that they had no power to grant, the Court will interfere so far as to set the jurisdiction of the magistrates in motion. (Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J., 14 East, 397; Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 1 New Sess. Cas. 247). Therefore the Court will compel them by mandamus to receive or hear an appeal or other matter of complaint within their jurisdiction. And where a father and son were removed by two several orders of removal, and the parish officers agreed that the settlement of the son should follow the father, to save the expense of a separate appeal, in consequence of which an appeal was entered against the order removing the father only; and, after the sessions had quashed the order for the removal of the father, the respondent parish refusing to take back the son, the appellants applied, at the following sessions, to enter and try the appeal, which the Court of quarter sessions refused on application; the Court granted a mandamus to the sessions to enter continuances, and determine the appeal against the order removing the son, though, at a subsequent session to that holden after the order of removal was made, saying, that, as the appellants were prepared to enter their appeal at the proper time, and which was rendered unnecessary by the agreement of the respondents, it was but reasonable that they should grant the application. (Reg. v. The Justices of Wiltshire, 1 East, 683; Reg. v. The Justices of Leicester, E., 23 Geo. 3, cited in last case; and see Reg. v. The Justices of Buckinghamshire, 3 East, 342, and Reg. v. The Justices of Devonshire, Cald. 32, accord.: Reg. v. The Commissioners of Dean Inclosure, 2 M. & S. 80; but see Reg. v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 9 D. & Ry. 210). So, a mandamus lies to the justices to receive and adjourn an appeal made to the next sessions after an order of removal, the sessions having dismissed it, on the ground that no notice had been given to the respondents. (Reg. v. The Justices of Staffordshire, 7 East, 549; Reg. v. The Justices of Wiltshire, 10 East, 404). And where it appeared that an order of removal was made on Tuesday the 8th July, but not served till the following Saturday, and that the sessions were held on the Tuesday following, and lasted four days, the parish omitting to appeal at the July sessions, the justices refused to receive the appeal at Michaelmas, on the ground that it was not entered at the sessions next after the making and service of the order as required by the statute; the Court granted the mandamus, holding, that, although the statute required the appeal to be made to the next quarter sessions, it must, nevertheless, mean the next practicable sessions, and that the parish officers were entitled to a reasonable time to make inquiries, in order that they might judge as to the expediency of appealing. (Reg. v. The Justices of Essex, 1 B. & Ald. 210; S. P., Reg. v. The Justices of Flintshire, 7 T. R. 200; Reg. v. Hendon, 2 D. & R. 249; Reg. v. The Justices of Cornwall, 6 Adol. & Ell. 894; Reg. v. The Justices of Herefordshire, 8 Dowl. P. C. 638; see also, Reg. v. The Justices of the North Riding of Yorkshire, 3 T. R. 150; Reg. v. The Justices of Gloucestershire, Doug. 182; Reg. v. The Justices of the East Riding of Yorkshire, Id. 183; Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey, 1 M. & S. 479; Reg. v. The Justices of London, 15 East, 632; Reg. v. The Justices of Carmarthen, 4 B. & Ald. 291; Reg. v. The Justices of Dorsetshire, 15 East, 200; Reg. v. The Justices of Sussex, Id. 208; Reg. v. St. Giles, 11 Mod. 259; Reg. v. Coods, 1 Bott, pl. 290; Reg. v. Atkins, 4 T. R. 12; Reg. v. The Justices of Devonshire, 2 Bott, pl. 961; Cald. 32, S. C.). So where an order of removal was made and executed on the 11th January, and the sessions commenced on the 12th, and lasted fourteen days, when they were adjourned to the 2nd February, which lasted one day, and again adjourned to the 1st March, which lasted two days; it appeared by the practice of the sessions appeals against orders of removal might have been lodged at any time during the sessions, or at the adjournment next after making the order; the appellants gave due notice and entered their appeal at the Easter sessions, but the justices refused to hear it, on the ground that it should have been entered at the preceding sessions, the Court however granted a mandamus commanding them to hear it. Ellenborough, C. J., said, "the statute does not contemplate the continuance of the sessions. It enacts, that the party may appeal 'to the next quarter sessions,' without adding 'or some adjournment thereof.' It takes the holding of the sessions as the point of time to which it refers the appeal; and the sessions are always considered in law as one day, whatever period they may by accidental causes be extended. The appellant parish ought to have a reasonable time allowed for considering whether they will appeal or not. We think the interim between the 11th and 12th January was not a reasonable time for that purpose." (Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey, 1 M. & S. 479). So, where the sessions refused to hear an appeal against an order of filiation under 49 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 5, on the ground that no notice of appeal had been given, and would not admit evidence of a parol notice, alleging that notice ought to have been in writing, the Court upon application granted a mandamus, commanding the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal, holding, that, as the statute did not require the notice of appeal to be in writing, the parol notice was sufficient. (Reg. v. The Justices of Salop, 4 B. & Ald. 626; see also, Reg. v. The Justices of Carmarthenshire, Id. 563; see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 3; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 4). So, where a rate was published on the 28th October, and the next general quarter sessions were on the 29th of the same month, an appeal against it was entered at the next general quarter sessions following, which were held on the 11th January, the Court refused to hear the appeal, because it had not been entered at a general session which had intervened between these two quarter sessions. On application, however, a mandamus was granted to enter continuances and hear the appeal, holding that the appellant was not bound to enter it at the intervening general sessions, and that it had been lodged in time. (Reg. v. The Justices of London, 15 East, 632; Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey, ubi sup.). So, where an order was made for the removal of a pauper by two justices of a borough, which was a county of itself, to a parish without the borough, and the magistrates of the borough held only general sessions twice a year, and not quarter sessions, upon appeal to the next sessions, which were the general and not the quarter sessions, the magistrates refused leave to lodge the appeal; the Court, however, on application, granted a mandamus to the magistrates of the borough to hear the appeal, holding that where an appeal is given to the sessions of a town, which is a county of itself, it must be made to the general sessions, and that the magistrates were empowered to determine all matters within the borough, which, according to law, belonged to the office of justices of the peace in their quarter sessions. (Reg. v. The Justices of Carmarthen, 4 M. & S. 291). Where an order of removal was served on the 8th April, and the sessions were holden on the 15th, and, by the practice of the sessions, eight clear days' notice of appeal was required; notice of the intention to try the appeal was given for the July sessions, but the Court of quarter sessions refused to hear the appeal, on the ground that it ought to have been entered and respited at the April sessions; but the Court held, that the entry for the mere purpose of adjournment was an useless act, which only occasioned expense, and was, therefore, unnecessary; and that it was sufficient to enter it at the sessions at which the party, by his notice, was bound to try it; they therefore granted a mandamus to enter continuances, and hear the appeal. (Reg. v. The Justices of Devon, 8 B. & C. 640, n.; and see Reg. v. The Justices of Southampton, Id. 641, n., and Reg. v. The Justices of Kent, Id. 639, accord.). So, where an appeal against an order of removal was entered at the January sessions, and respited till the April sessions, and, before the April sessions, fifteen days' notice of trial was given, the Court of quarter sessions required, by a rule, that, whenever an appeal against an order of removal was entered and respited, notice should be given within a month to the officers of the removing parish; no such notice having been given, the justices refused to hear the appeal: however, upon application, the Court of King's Bench granted a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeal. Denman, C. J., said, "The Court of quarter sessions are to say whether reasonable notice of appeal has been given; they are to judge what notice is reasonable, but they have no right to require any other notice than the one required by the Legislature. Here they have attempted to require a notice of the entry and respite of the appeal." (Reg. v. The Justices of Norfolk, 5 B. & Adol. 950; Reg. v. The Justices of Montgomeryshire, 14 Law Journ., M. C., 142; S. C., 9 Jur. 927). So, where an appeal was entered at the July sessions, and respited till the following October sessions, the justices refused to hear it, because it appeared, that, by the practice of the sessions, fourteen days' notice of appeal was to be given, exclusive of the day of notice and the day of holding the sessions, one day being reckoned inclusive; the notice was one day too late; the Court of King's Bench, however, upon application, granted a mandamus, and at the same time stated, that, under the circumstances, justice would be most satisfactorily administered by ordering the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal. (Reg. v. The Justices of Lancashire, 7 B. & C. 601; see Reg. v. The Justices of Buckinghamshire, 3 East, 342; Reg. v. The Justices of Wiltshire, 10 East, 404; but see Ex parte Beck, 3 B. & Adol. 704). Where, after an order of removal made and executed, and notice of appeal given, the removing parish abandoned the order, and obtained a supersedeas under the hands and seals of the removing justices, and served it upon the overseers of the appellant parish. At the next sessions the appeal was called on, and the respondents objected to its being heard, on the ground of the order having been superseded, the Court conceiving, that, as no order was in existence, they had no jurisdiction, and refused to entertain the appeal. Upon application, the Court of Queen's Bench granted a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeal, saying, that, as the appeal had been regularly entered in due course, and stood for hearing, the justices had no power to put an end to the order in the manner they had done. (Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 9 Law Journ., M. C., 59; see Reg. v. The Justices of Cambridge, 2 Adol. & Ell. 370; Reg. v. The Justices of Norfolk, 5 B. & Ald. 484). And so, where the notice of appeal had been served on Sunday, it appearing, that, if the appellants had deferred the service another day, they would have been too late, the Court of King's Bench granted a mandamus to the justices in sessions to receive and hear the appeal. (Reg. v. The Justices of Huntingdonshire, Cald. 283; vide stat. 29 Car. 2, c. 7, s. 6, which enacts, that no writ, process, warrant, order, &c. shall be served or executed on the Lord's day, and that the service shall be void; also Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 2 Dow., N. S., 723; Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Whitmarsh, 7 B. & C. 601).

LONDON, MAY 8, 1847.

It is rumoured that very considerable changes are in contemplation with regard to the transaction of that portion of the business of equity which is now conducted in the Masters' offices. Of what the intended changes are we have no precise information; and we believe nothing has generally transpired beyond this, that the intention (as it is supposed) is to abolish the Masters' offices, and to substitute a small number of assistant equity judges, and a corresponding number of accountants in equity; the judges to take the business properly judicial, such as references upon pleadings and upon title, and such questions of law as are now discussed before the Masters themselves; and the accountants, as their name bespeaks, to take the accounts with the taking of which the Masters are now charged, but the whole business of which is transacted by their clerks.

Whatever may be the other details of the proposed measures of reform in this department of Chancery business, we trust that they will comprise the two following points, without which, we apprehend, they will not satisfy the wants or expectations of the public; viz. publicity in the proceedings of the courts of the judges substituted for the Masters, and the total abolition of the system of detached warrants.

It scarcely needs argument to shew, that, wherever the nature of the business renders it at all practicable, business purely, or even principally, judicial, should be transacted in public; and that judges, counsel, attorneys, and officers of the court, all transact their business with more care and with more zeal when public reputation is the reward of zeal, and public obloquy or ridicule the reward of ignorance and neglect. But the abolition of the mode of proceeding by detached warrants, and the substitution for it of the continuous mode of proceeding pursued in the superior courts, is the reform the most absolutely required.

The system of proceeding by warrants may, for the information of those who do not practise in Chancery, shortly be described thus:—A certain matter being committed to the jurisdiction of the Master, (say, for instance, in any ordinary suit for administering an estate, a reference to inquire and state the priorities of several incumbrancers), a certain hour on a certain day is appointed for the parties to be heard before the Master by their solicitors or counsel; and that hour is devoted, or at least appropriated, to that business. When it is over, those parties must make way for some others whose time for being heard has arrived; another day and hour are then appointed for the first set, who, on that day, enjoy again the advantage of an hour of discussion of their case, and so on. Sometimes two and sometimes three hours consecutively, but rarely more, are to be obtained for the continued discussion of one case; and the Master may, but rarely does, proceed, as it is termed, de die in diem, with some particular case; that is, commences it and does not leave it till it is finished. But this is an exceptional practice. The usual practice is to have one or two hour warrants, and so to dispose of a case piecemeal.

Now, this is bad enough in theory, because nothing can be imagined more intrinsically opposed to a sound investigation of a subject, than taking it up at intervals removed considerable distances from each other. But, if it is simply bad in theory, it is horribly bad in practice. The way it works is this:—If both parties are not present by a quarter of an hour after the hour fixed, the party then present may proceed ex parte. Therefore, in pursuance of that principle of ex parte which makes men always delay a duty till the very last moment when it must be performed, it is the practice for neither party to dream of attending the warrant till the quarter of an hour's grace has expired. By the time all parties are collected, and ready to proceed, some further small portion of time has passed, and the result is, that of an hour warrant, not above forty minutes are in general actually devoted to business: a case is, therefore, if at all intricate and difficult, barely gone into before it must be postponed, perhaps for a week, perhaps for more. When the parties next meet on the field of battle, the Master has in the interval of course had his attention directed to a great variety of matters, and as Masters, however able, are not preternatural men, they have of course forgotten the greater part of what was said to them on the first warrant. A great part of the second is, therefore, ex necessitate rei, occupied in reminding the Master of what he was told before, and the remainder only is available for new matter. And so the affair goes on from warrant to warrant, at least a quarter of each being absolutely wasted in one party politely waiting for the other, or the Master as politely waiting for both; and another quarter being substantially wasted in reviving the forgotten proceedings of a former warrant. The result of the whole system is, that, of the time of those really important and highly paid functionaries—the Masters in Chancery, on an average one third is, without any fault of their own, but from the gross vice of the system, totally lost to the public. Now, the simple substitution of the continuous system of proceeding would remedy at least this one great mischief. Every change from an established system is of course always viewed by many persons as fraught with inconvenience. But what would be the mischief of such a change as this, almost passes comprehension. If the Master is directed to look into pleadings to see whether they are impertinent, or scandalous, or insufficient, (a frequent and material part of his duties), when he has done so, and made his report, the dissatisfied party excepts to the report, and exactly the same business which has been gone into before the Master on separate warrants, is brought before the Court and disposed of on one hearing of the exceptions. So, if the Master has had to inquire into the question, whether a vendor has shewn a sufficient title, which he has done by receiving evidence of title and hearing arguments thereon, spread over an infinite number of unconnected hours, then, if either party excepts to his report, the whole matter comes before the superior court, and is gone into and disposed of as a cause, that is, is not abandoned, when once begun, until it is finished. This is found to be a convenient course for the superior court, and it is inconceivable why it should be a very inconvenient one for the inferior court; and, for the reasons above stated, there is good ground to conclude that it would be a much more convenient and efficient plan than that at present pursued.

There are other points also tending to expedition, on which we conceive it would be for the interest of suitors, that the practice of the superior court should be introduced in the courts substituted for the Master's offices. For instance, if the party having the conduct of the suit neglects to proceed for a given time, the other party should have a power similar to that possessed by a defendant of moving to dismiss the bill, if the plaintiff does not proceed with due diligence. In fact, we apprehend that the more the practice of the subordinate court of reference is assimilated to that of the superior court, the better will be the result. In this view we should be glad also to see the whole machinery of states effects, &c. altogether abolished. At present, if a decree in Chancery is made, referring certain inquiries to the Master, the parties do not proceed as a matter of course upon the pleadings and evidence already before the Court, but what is termed a state of facts, that is, a sort of rechauffé of the case made by either party, is drawn up for the Master, and upon that statement, and not upon the bill and answer, the parties proceed in the Master's office. In strictness, the Master ought to look at nothing else but the states of facts and the evidence produced in support of them. But as the real groundwork of the inquiry are the bill and answer, and the evidence produced in support of the bill and answer in the court above, it would of course be absurd for the Master really to confine his attention to a set of pleadings which are oftentimes little better than a shadow of the real pleadings. In practice, therefore, the bill and answer are continually dragged before the Master, and great confusion and waste of time are often the result of a struggle between the desire of the Master to confine himself to that matter, to which, in technical strictness, he ought to confine himself, and his desire to travel out of a set of pleadings which he feels do not correctly and sufficiently represent the real case on which he has to report. A state of facts is in truth an absurdity. The Master never can have to look at more as the foundation of the inquiry referred to him, than is contained in the original pleadings, and less ought never to be brought before him. The result is, that he ought to proceed upon the pleadings themselves, and only in the matter of evidence should there be any departure from or extension of that which was originally before the Court. We throw out these observations, the correctness of which we are disposed to believe would be supported by most Chancery practitioners, in the hope, that, if the matters to which they refer are not already provided for by those to whom the higher authorities have entrusted the preparation of the reforms under consideration, their attention may thus be called to them.

SINCE our last week's Number was published, our attention has been called to the article which appeared therein, relative to the case of Elizabeth Johnson, tried at the last Liverpool assizes. Nothing was more remote from our intention than to misstate any of the circumstances, or to cast a reflection in any way upon the summing up of the very learned judge who presided at the trial. The fact is, that the article, as originally composed, was one of much greater length than that inserted, but owing to the press of matter it was found necessary at the eleventh hour to curtail it. It appears that, at the first examination of the body of the deceased, no arsenic was found, and the jury on the inquisition returned a verdict of natural death. On the second examination, however, a small portion of arsenic was detected, and the medical witnesses stated, that it was impossible their experiments could have introduced it, because the zinc and other metals used by them in making the test were previously tested and were found quite pure, and in addition the water was pure distilled water. Then, on summing up, the learned judge stated, that this being so, it was material for the prisoner that the attention of the jury should be called to the fact proved, viz. that after interment, the body, from the wetness of the soil around, had become filled with water, which, not being pure distilled water, might reconcile the appearances at the first examination, when no arsenic was found, with those of the second, when slight indications appeared; but that, if large quantities of arsenic had been found on the second examination, the fact of the body having absorbed the water ought not to be taken into their consideration.

STAMP ON A FURTHER SECURITY FOR A MORTGAGE DEBT.

The temper of the courts with respect to the construction of the Stamp Act has taken a turn. Until recently the judges were astute or blind (as the case might require) in order that the subject might be changed as lightly as possible, (Warrington v. Furber, 8 East, 242; Tomkins v. Ashby, 6 B. & Cr. 641), and in this spirit they decided that the following words in the stat. 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, respecting transfers of mortgages, "and if any further sum of money or stock shall be added to the principal money or stock already secured, the ad valorem duty on mortgages payable under the said recited acts respectively shall be charged only in respect of such further money or stock," are to be read as if the word "only" were transposed, so as to make the passage read thus, "only the ad valorem duty," &c. (Doe d. Barnes v. Roe, 6 Scott, 525). And in Pierpoint v. Gower (5 Scott, N. R., 605) it was held, that a mortgage-deed did not require an ad valorem stamp, because the sum secured happened to be owing on a warrant of attorney, although not a word of exemption in such a case is to be found among the statutes. "In order," said Alderson, B., on one occasion, "to sustain an objection for want of a stamp, you must hit the bird in the eye." Now, however, the revenue is being taken into favour, and it is sufficient if you wing your game. Passing over for the present the case of Birt v. Leigh, (14 Mee. & W. 177), which has overruled Diddin v. Morris, (2 Car. & P. 44), and has decided that half the receipts, for rent, tradesmen's accounts, &c., in common use, are inadmissible in evidence, and the still more extraordinary case of Chadwick v. Clarke, (1 Com. B. Rep. 700), deciding that a verbal agreement is liable to stamp-duty, (how the winged words are to be arrested at Somerset-house may be seen in the report), our present business is with the case of Humberston v. Jones, reported in the last number of THE JURIST, (p. 337), where it was held, that a deed authorising a mortgagee to sell the estate held by him in mortgage is a further security for a mortgage within the Stamp Act. This decision will occasion much alarm and inconvenience, for a contrary construction of the statute has been commonly acted upon.

In the schedule to the General Stamp Act, 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, under the title MORTGAGE, an ad valorem stamp-duty is imposed on a "mortgage, conditional surrender by way of mortgage, further charges, wadset, &c., or affecting any lands, &c.;" also, "any conveyance of any lands, &c., in trust to be sold or converted into money, which shall be intended only as a security, and shall be redeemable, &c.;" "also any defeasance, &c., for defeating or making redeemable, or explaining or qualifying, any conveyance, &c. which shall be apparently absolute, but intended only as a security;" "also, any agreement, &c., accompanied with a deposit of title-deeds, for making a mortgage," &c. These are all the material words of that part of the schedule which imposes the ad valorem stamp-duty on mortgages in general. It is important to observe, that they clearly do not include a deed by which the owner of a mortgaged estate authorises the mortgagee to sell it for payment of the debt. But there is, towards the end of this title in the schedule, a division headed, "Exemptions from the said ad valorem duty on mortgages, &c., to which the same may be liable, but not from any other duty;" and among these exemptions is the following: "any deed or other instrument made as an additional or further security for any sum or sums of money &c. already secured by any deed or instrument which shall have already paid the ad valorem duty hereby charged, to be exempt from the said ad valorem duty hereby charged, so far as regards such sum or sums of money, &c., in case such additional or further security shall be made by the same person who made the original security; but if any further sum of money or stock shall be added, &c." It is to be observed that this is a clause of exemption, not of imposition, although we admit it may be looked at, if necessary, for the purpose of interpreting the preceding clause of imposition. Now, if A. mortgages Whiteacre to B., and afterwards mortgages Blackacre to secure the same debt, the second deed, being a deed of mortgage, would be liable to the ad valorem duty but for the clause of exemption, which applies to all instruments which would otherwise be liable to the mortgage duty, being further securities by the original mortgagors. It does not say that all further securities are mortgages, but it says that all mortgages shall be exempt if they are further securities by the original mortgagor. The title of the clause, "Exemptions from the said ad valorem Duty on Mortgages," &c., plainly shews that it is confined to deeds of mortgage, and does not extend to everything which can be called a further security. It could never be contended, for instance, that a bond, or deed of covenant, or promissory note, for the mortgage debt, given by the mortgagor's heir, would, by the operation of this exemption, become liable to the ad valorem mortgage duty. Yet such instruments are certainly further securities. So a power to sell a mortgaged estate is a further security, or rather a further remedy, but it is not a mortgage. A further security, to be liable in any case to the mortgage duty, must be a mortgage or charge of some property or interest in property not already mortgaged or charged for the same debt. Thus, if lands are demised for 1000 years by way of mortgage, a deed conveying the reversion in fee as a further security is also a mortgage, because it charges with the debt an interest which was not before charged. (Doe d. Bartley v. Gray, 2 Adol. & Ell. 89; 4 Nev. & M. 719; Brown v. Pegg, 6 Q. B. Rep. 1).

In Humberston v. Jones a mortgage in fee had been executed for securing 1000*l.*, with the usual proviso for redemption, but no power of sale. After the death of the mortgagor, the mortgage was transferred, and the transferee advanced to the mortgagor's heir a further sum of 1723*l.* The deed of transfer contained a covenant by the heir to pay 2723*l.* on different days from those specified in the original mortgage, and also a power of sale for the purpose of recovering the whole sum. The deed bore one stamp of 6*l.*, which was only sufficient to cover the 1723*l.* The stamp was held insufficient. Parke, B., said—

"The decision in the case of Doe d. Barnes v. Roe, (4 Bing. N. C. 787), establishes, that, if there be a transfer of the former security only, and a new advance upon the same security of a sum of money, the ad valorem duty on the latter is sufficient, and no further stamp is necessary. But if, besides the transfer of the former mortgage, a fresh security is added for the sum originally lent, as where the first mortgage is of a term, and the second conveys the fee to secure the old and new advances in one aggregate sum, it has been decided that a further stamp is necessary by the case of Brown v. Pegg, (6 Q. B. Rep. 1), such a case not falling within the provisions of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 117. We cannot distinguish this from the present case. This is not a transfer from the first mortgagee to the plaintiff, giving him only the same security which he had, and the same right to the land conveyed, but here is a fresh covenant from the defendant to the plaintiff, to pay at different times the original demand of 1000*l.* as well as the subsequent advance of 1723*l.*; and here is also a power to raise the former as well as the latter sum by sale of the estate. The deed, therefore, contains more than a transfer of the old mortgage and the advance of a further sum, and consequently requires a further stamp than the ad valorem in the new advance."

It was not necessary to decide, and the Court did not distinctly say, whether the extra stamp should have been the ad valorem stamp on the old debt, or merely the common stamp on deeds not otherwise charged. But from the language of the judgment and the reference to Brown v. Pegg, it may be conjectured that they thought the deed stamp would have been sufficient. Yet, if an additional stamp was necessary in respect of a further security, that stamp should have been an ad valorem stamp, for the further security was not given by the original mortgagee. In Brown v. Pegg the deed unquestionably continued a further security by a person who was not the original mortgagee, and, therefore, was clearly liable to the ad valorem duty, although the Court, in deciding that it was insufficiently stamped, said that it required "a deed stamp at least" in respect of the further security. The only ground for holding in Humberston v. Jones, that the ad valorem duty attached in respect of the old debt, was, that the power of sale constituted a further security, for the covenant to pay was clearly no mortgage security. That the power of sale was no further mortgage security seems to be equally clear; it was merely a means of making the existing security more conveniently available; it charged no new property.

If the liability of the deed to ad valorem duty in respect of the old debt be given up, the decision in Humberston v. Jones must rest on its liability to the deed stamp. For this liability, the exemption clause in the Stamp Act, cited above, cannot be relied on, for that is confined to cases where there is a further security. Now, the only cases prior to Humberston v. Jones, in which a deed of transfer and further charge has been held liable to the deed stamp, are Lant v. Peace (3 Nev. & P. 327; 8 Adol. & Ell. 248) and Brown v. Pegg, (6 Q. B. Rep. 1). In Lant v. Peace the deed contained a clear further security, and the decision (erroneous as we think) was expressly founded on that fact and on the words of the exempting clause. Paterson, J., said, "I feel no doubt on this question, on looking at the terms of what is called the exempting clause." In Brown v. Pegg, the deed, as we have seen, was liable to the ad valorem stamp, and came within the exception in the exempting clause. That case is, therefore, no authority for the present, which is to be supported, if at all, on the following clause in the schedule to the Stamp Act:—

"MORTGAGE, &c., with a conveyance of the equity or other matter, in the same deed, viz.:—

(Provision for the case of a conveyance of the equity of redemption).

"And in all other cases where a mortgage or other instrument hereby charged with the ad valorem duty on mortgages shall be contained in one and the same deed or writing, with any other matter or thing, (except what shall be incident to such mortgage or other instrument), such deed or writing shall be charged with the same duties (except the progressive duties) as such mortgage or other instrument, and such other matter or thing, would have been separately charged with, if contained in separate deeds or writings."

In Humberston v. Jones, the Court may have considered that the covenant to pay the whole debt and the power of sale were not incident to the new mortgage. But surely this was taking a very narrow view of the transaction. So far as concerned the old mortgagee it was a transfer, and that part of the deed which related to him was exempted from all stamp duty by the 3 Geo. 4, c. 117, as interpreted in Doe d. Barnes v. Roe. So far as concerned the mortgagee and the new mortgagee, it was a single transaction—a loan of 2723*l.*, subject to ad valorem duty on part, exempt from ad valorem duty on the residue. How could the deed be said to contain anything not incident either to the transfer of the old mortgage or to the securing of the further advance? The personal covenant by the mortgagee to pay the old debt, and the power of sale in respect of it, by extending the transferee's remedy for that debt, and making the recovery of it less expensive, may have rendered the security for the new advance more valuable, and was therefore incident to that security; but unquestionably, as the transaction consisted only of a transfer and a further charge, the matter in question was incident either to the further charge, and so covered by the ad valorem duty, or to the transfer, and so exempt by the stat. 3 Geo. 4, c. 117. To try this better, suppose the arrangement had been effected by two deeds, one containing a transfer of the old mortgage with a new covenant for payment and a power of sale, and the other containing a security for the further advances. The latter would of course have required the ad valorem duty only; and it is equally plain, that the former, containing nothing but a transfer, and matter incident to a transfer, would have required the transfer stamp only. Unite them, and the transfer stamp becomes unnecessary. (Doe v. Roe).

The decision in Lant v. Peace has been much disapproved of, and is open to criticism similar to which we have applied to Humberston v. Jones, and as those cases stand unsupported by any other authority, or by each other, it is to be hoped that they will be reviewed, and the questions involved in them settled on a more satisfactory footing. That the decision in Humberston v. Jones was quite unexpected at Somerset House, may be seen from Mr. Tilsley's work on the Stamp Laws, (p. 485).

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

May 1.—The Court refused a rule for a new trial in Bannister v. Barrow.
Doe d. Tippets v. Waters.

May 5.

Morgan v. Soames.

May 7.—The Court will, on Saturday the 8th May, give judgment in the following cases:—

Parnel v. Smith.

Pemberton v. Colls.

In re Brennan and Galon.

Lane v. Ridley.

Goddard v. Wray.

The Crown Paper will be taken on the first Thursday of next Term.

* In Doe d. Barnes v. Roe a fresh covenant by the mortgagee to surrender copyholds was held not to render a deed-stamp necessary.

† "We find no provision in the act, except in cases of conveyance by way of sale, that, where a deed operates on several subject-matters in several ways, it shall have several stamps, and in the absence of any such provision, we think that one stamp is sufficient." (Per Lord Denman, C. J., Doe v. Fereday, 11 Adol. & Ell. 27).

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Where, upon an appeal against a rate, the appellant, on the trial being called on, was ready to try and prove notice of appeal, but the respondents were unprepared, and applied to put off the trial until the next sessions, which was granted, when the counsel for the respondents handed to the clerk of the peace a copy of the notice of appeal to enable him to draw up the order; but at the next sessions the appeal was called on, but the respondents' counsel objected to its being heard until the appellant first proved service of the original notice of appeal, conceiving the fact to have been admitted on the former occasion. This the appellant was not prepared to do, and the sessions confirmed the rate. Upon application, the Court of King's Bench granted a mandamus, commanding the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal, at the same time stating that, as the respondents had acted upon the notice, other proof of it was rendered unnecessary, and, therefore, the sessions ought to have heard the appeal. (Reg. v. The Justices of Herefordshire, 4 B. & Adol. 561; Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 5 B. & Adol. 667; S. P., see Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 2 Dowl. N. S., 719). So, where an appeal was lodged against an order of removal at the sessions, sent after the order was made, the applicants then moved to respite, no notice having been given to the respondents; but the sessions considering that there had been sufficient time to have given notice of trial after service of the order, and before holding the sessions, dismissed it. The Court of King's Bench, however, upon application, granted a mandamus, commanding the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal, stating that the statute was compulsory on the sessions in such cases to receive and adjourn the appeal. (Reg. v. The Justices of Staffordshire, 7 East, 549; Reg. v. The Justices of Wiltshire, 10 East, 404). So, where a party, assessed under a poor-rate, appealed against it, and, after notice of appeal, the overseers finding the rate could not be supported, abandoned it. The appellant, however, still proceeded with the appeal, and at the ensuing sessions it was moved to quash the rate; when the justices held, that, as the rate was abandoned, they had no longer any jurisdiction, and refused to hear the appeal. The Court of King's Bench, however, were of a different opinion, and granted a mandamus commanding the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal; thereby deciding that the overseers had no power to abandon a rate duly made. (Reg. v. The Justices of Cambridge, 2 Adol. & Ell. 370; and see Reg. v. Fouché, 11 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 2). So, where a poor-rate was made in September, and an appeal was entered and respited at the Michaelmas sessions, and notice of appeal given for the following, the justices refused to hear the appeal, upon the ground, that the appeal not having been heard at the previous sessions, and having been adjourned without proof of want of notice to the respondents, or of its being impracticable for the appellant to proceed, they had no jurisdiction. The Court of King's Bench, however, granted a mandamus commanding them to enter continuances and hear the appeal, at the same time stating, that, although it was competent for the justices, at the first sessions after publishing the rate, to refuse to receive the appeal without proof of notice; but, having received and adjourned it, they were bound to hear it. (Reg. v. The Justices of Wilts, 8 B. & C. 380; S. C., 2 M. & Ry. 401; Reg. v. The Justices of Oxfordshire, 1 M. & S. 446). So, where an appeal against an order of removal was heard at the Easter quarter sessions, and the order was confirmed, subject to a case for the opinion of the Court of King's Bench, and the counsel for the appellants drew a case, and submitted it to the counsel for the respondents, the counsel however being unable to agree, the appellants applied to the justices at their next sessions to settle the case, and a reference was had to the chairman, but he did not settle it. The appellants again applied to the quarter sessions, who refused to interfere, on the ground that they had no jurisdiction. Upon application to the Court of King's Bench, however, they granted a mandamus to the justices, commanding them to enter continuances and hear the appeal, unless in the meantime they settled the case, holding that they could not command them to state a case; but, not having absolutely decided, they were bound to hear the appeal. (Reg. v. The Justices of Suffolk, 1 Dowl. P. C. 163; Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 1 New Seas. Cas. 247; Reg. v. The Justices of Cheshire, 15 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 114). But where the sessions, on determining an appeal, have granted a case, but none has been stated, the Court will, under some circumstances, direct a mandamus to the justices who heard the appeal to state a case. (Reg. v. The Earl of Eppingham, 2 B. & Ad. 393, n.; Reg. v. The Justices of Pembrokeshire, 1b. 391; and see Reg. v. The Justices of Staffordshire, 1 Dowl. P. C. 484). Where an application was made to the justices of Kent, at their sessions, by petition, to fix the wages of millers within the county; but they, conceiving that the statute was confined to the wages of labourers in husbandry, refused to interfere, upon which an application was made to the Court of King's Bench for a mandamus commanding them to hear and determine the application, upon which the writ was directed to issue, the Court being of opinion that the justices had jurisdiction, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "We do not, however, by granting this mandamus, at all interfere with the exercise of that discretion which the Legislature meant to confide to the justices of the peace in sessions: we only say, that they have a discretion to exercise; and, therefore, they must hear the application; but having heard it, it rests entirely with them to act or not upon it, as they think fit." (Reg. v. The Justices of Kent, 14 East, 395; and see Reg. v. The Justices of Cumberland, 1 M. & S. 190; 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 15; 1 Jac. 1, c. 6, s. 3; 16 Car. 1, c. 4, s. 2). Where, upon appeal to the justices at sessions against overseers' accounts, they refused to hear it, on the ground, that, as they had not been examined and allowed at a special sessions, pursuant to 50 Geo. 3, c. 49, they had no jurisdiction, the Court, after hearing counsel, being satisfied that the sessions had jurisdiction, and that they ought to have heard the appeal, granted a mandamus commanding them to enter continuances and hear the appeal. (Reg. v. The Justices of Colchester, 5 B. & Ald. 535; S. C., 1 D. & Ry. 146; 1 Cas. Mag. 51; and see Reg. v. Barlett, 2 Stra. 983; Reg. v. Whitear, 3 Burr. 1365; Lester's case, 16 East, 374; Reg. v. Pascoe, 2 M. & S. 343). So, where there were two overseers of the poor, and, by arrangement between them, each became acting overseers for half the year, and one appealed against the accounts of the other, when the appeal was called on at the sessions, and one of the witnesses for the respondents examined his counsel, took an objection to the appeal, and contended, that it would not lie by one joint overseer against the other: the justices, coinciding in this view of the case, dismissed the appeal, without hearing the appellant. Upon an application for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal, it was urged, upon the part of the magistrates, that the appellant was not competent, as a co-overseer, to appeal in such a case; and that, as the sessions had already exercised their jurisdiction, and decided the appeal, the Court would not interfere by awarding a mandamus; the Court held, however, that the appeal was not heard, and that the grounds of refusal were insufficient, and granted the writ accordingly. Lord Tenterden, C. J., said, "It appears that each overseer kept a separate account of his own receipts and disbursements. There was nothing unusual in this: in the present case one appeals against the other's accounts. His interest in the affairs of the parish is not the less because he is a joint overseer. There is nothing in the statute against his appealing, and it is reasonable that he should have that power. (Reg. v. The Justices of Gloucestershire, 1 B. & Adol. 1; and see Reg. v. The Justices of Norfolk, 2 B. & Adol. 944). Where three persons were jointly summoned to answer a complaint, under sect. 34 of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, for unlawful fishing, upon the hearing they were convicted in penalties of separate sums for each defendant. After the conviction, a single notice of appeal was served on the complainant, signed by the three defendants, stating they intended "to appeal against a conviction of us." The defendants entered into three several recognisances by separate instruments; three separate convictions were returned to the sessions, each of one defendant. On the case being called on, the counsel for the respondent objected, that there ought to have been one notice of appeal from each appellant. The sessions allowed the objection, and confirmed the conviction, without hearing the merits. The Court of Queen's Bench, however, granted a mandamus, commanding the sessions to hear the appeal, at the same time stating, that, if there was any variance, (which it did not appear there was), it was one that could not mislead; and, therefore, the justices should have heard the appeal. (Reg. v. The Justices of Oxfordshire, 4 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 177; S. C., 3 G. & D. 348). It seems, wherever an objection is taken which is untenable, and ought not to have prevailed, the Court of Queen's Bench will grant a mandamus to compel the sessions to enter continuances and hear the appeal, provided there has not been such a hearing of the appeal so as to preclude the Court from interfering; for instance, if the sessions refuse to hear an appeal on a preliminary objection taken to the sufficiency of the notice of appeal, the Court of Queen's Bench will grant a mandamus. (Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey, 3 D. & L. 573; Reg. v. The Justices of Gloucestershire, 1 B. & Adol. 1; Reg. v. The Justices of Kent, 2 Q. B. Rep. 686; Reg. v. The Justices of Kesteven, 3 Q. B. Rep. 810, overruling Reg. v. The Justices of Carnarvonshire, 2 Q. B. Rep. 326, and Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, Id. 381. See Ex parte Ackworth, 1 D. & L. 718; S. C., 3 Q. B. Rep. 397, n. a; Reg. v. The Justices of Flintshire, 2 D. & L. 143; S. C., 13 Law Journ., M. C., 349; Reg. v. The Justices of Sussex, 1 New Sess. Cas. 438; Ex parte Wellinborough, 15 Law Journ., M. C., 20). Where an order of removal was made by A. B. and Josiah Wilson, and a duplicate copy served, in which the name of the latter justice was illegibly written, but the names of the two justices were both distinctly written in the heading and jurats of the examinations, upon a petition of appeal (according to the custom of the Middlesex sessions) being presented, the order appealed against was described as one made by A. B. and "Josiah Walters." At the April sessions, the appeal was entered upon the records of the sessions as against an order made by A. B. and "John Walter," Esq. On the 30th June, notice of appeal was given by the appellant parish against an order made by A. B. and "John Walter." It appeared, that the clerk of the peace, finding no magistrate in the commission of the peace of the name of "Josiah Walter," but one of the name of "John Walter," entered the appeal in the latter name, supposing it to be a mistake. On the appeal coming on to be heard at the sessions, the Court refused to hear it, on the ground of there being no such order as that appealed against. The Court of Queen's Bench, however, granted a mandamus to the justices to hear the appeal, stating that the sessions would have jurisdiction to hear the appeal against the real order, if they were satisfied that such order was, in fact, made, and the appeal entered against it, although a mistake had occurred in the name. (Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 15 Law Journ., M. C., 160; Reg. v. The Justices of Denbighshire, (9 Dowl. P. C. 509).

LONDON, MAY 15, 1847.

A CASE tried on the 12th instant in the Common Pleas, (Barnes v. Ward), adds another link to the strong chain of evidence on which is founded a general belief that in framing measures of legal reform, Parliament seems always to delight in the omission of something most material. The case was one under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, for compensating the families of persons killed by accidents. The act expressly has in its contemplation the case of death occurring by accident to those whose death leaves unprotected, persons incapable of protecting themselves, and to whom the mere awarding of a gross sum of money is a very questionable benefit. Be it enacted, says the second clause, "That every such action shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and child of the person whose death shall have been so caused, and shall be brought by and in the name of the executor or administrator of the person deceased; and in every such action the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively, for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought. And the amount so recovered, after deducting the costs not recovered from the defendant, shall be divided amongst the before-mentioned parties in such shares as the jury by their verdict shall find and direct."

The Legislature must have been well aware in passing this, in many respects beneficial act, that it was legislating principally for the poor. If a wealthy or even a tolerably wealthy man receives injury from the unlawful carelessness of another, he very rarely in practice seeks to recover any compensation, unless the case has been one of gross and oppressive carelessness, in which he desires for the good of others less wealthy, to give a wholesome lesson to the wrongdoer. The class of persons for whom the act seems principally intended, is that of persons, who, with their families, depend upon labour for support, and to whom, therefore, the loss of an efficient relative is a loss, subjecting the survivors to the danger of poverty. We do not of course mean to say that cases may not arise in classes much above humble life, where the act may apply, but it is obvious that by far the greater number of instances for its application will be found to occur where the parties suing are in humble life. This being so, and the act plainly, by its very wording, contemplating a compensation for the children of a deceased person, would it not have been thought that provision would have been made for the proper securing and applying such sums for the benefit of children, as a jury should under the act think fit to award? But no; such a precautionary provision is not to be found in the act. The jury may divide the damages between the parties suffering, in such shares as they may think fit; but there is not a word giving to them or to any other authority, any power to regulate the estate to be taken by the sufferers, or the mode in which the damages shall be applied. The damages must be given to the parties entitled, in a gross sum or not at all.

The case of Barnes v. Ward brought out in a marked manner this oversight of the Legislature. The deceased was a charwoman, gaining towards the support of her family from 2s. to 3s. per day. The verdict was for the plaintiff, the husband, (subject to leave to move for a new trial on certain legal objections); and the damages given were—100% to the husband; 75% to each of two female children; and 50% to a boy. Now, it is needless to say, that, even to an adult male in the class of life of the plaintiff, the sudden possession of 100% absolutely, may prove anything but a benefit; but, as to the children, what was to be done with their share of damages? The jury in the case referred to, awarded a very proper and prudent desire that the money awarded to the children should be secured for them; to which the Court answered, that "it would consider how that could be done. That the act did not provide any means for that, in which it was defective."

We apprehend it will take a very great deal of consideration, to see how that which the jury desired, can be done. The money awarded by a verdict under this statute becomes immediately, we apprehend, the absolute property of the parties, whether they are infants or not. The question will be, "To whom ought the money to be paid?" The only hand approaching the character of a legal hand to receive it, would be that of the guardian; but even he is not, we apprehend, competent to discharge the party paying. In the case of a legacy, it is clear that payment by the executors to the guardian of an infant legatee, is not good payment to the infant; neither is payment to the infant himself. In the case of legacies to infants, it is true, an executor may discharge himself by paying the legacy into the Court of Chancery, under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52; but that act appears entirely confined to the cases where the infant claims by will or by inheritance, and not to apply to any case such as that under consideration, where the infant's title arises by an act inter vivos, constituting the infant a sort of judgment creditor of the defendant. We confess we see no legal power in any person to give a discharge to the party condemned to pay the damages; and the result, if we are right, will be, either that the defendant in such a case is not bound to pay at all till the infants attain their majorities, or else that the action at law must be followed by a suit in equity to secure the infant's property. Of course the costs of the suit would be borne by the fund, as the defendant at law has done all that he is bound to do, when he stands ready to pay the money to whoever is competent legally to discharge him. And of course, also, we need not observe that the expense of getting 200*l.* into court in trust for three infants, and getting maintenance for them during their minorities, and getting the balance out for them respectively as they attain their respective majorities, would make a trifling inroad upon the principal sum. Thus the Legislature has, by this careless omission, defeated a very material part of its beneficent purpose.

But another and perhaps more important question remains behind, viz. whether the jury has, under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, any power to give damages to infants. It is quite plain, that the act of Victoria never intended to condemn a defendant to be, perhaps for a whole minority, liable to hold a fund in trust for the parties entitled to the damages. The defendant is simply to be liable to an action for damages, and the jury may give damages, and the damages are to be divided in such shares as the jury shall find. (Sects. 1 and 2). If the defendant is bound to hold the damages, and to be liable to pay them at the termination of the minority, he would be, in fact, a trustee. Now, no one ever heard of a verdict for damages creating a continuing trust at common law, and the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, does not contain one word shewing an intention to create such a trust. If, then, there is no person to whom damages awarded to an infant can be legally paid, and if there be nothing in the act to convert the defendant into a trustee, what is the result? That the defendant cannot pay the damages to anybody, and is not bound to hold them. Did, therefore, the act intend to give power to a jury to direct damages to be paid, where there is no one competent to give a discharge? It may be argued with no small plausibility, that the Legislature did not so intend; and, consequently, that, under the act in question, damages cannot be given to infants. It is much to be regretted, that the act did not give power to the jury to direct the mode in which the recipients of the damages should enjoy them, and to order them to be paid into some official hand upon the trusts directed.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE DOCTRINE OF INSANITY, AS APPLIED TO THE CAPACITY TO MAKE A WILL.

It will be found, moreover, upon looking at the authorities, that the notion of moral insanity is not quite unknown to the law; in this sense, that the Courts, in cases where there was proof of general insanity, and an allegation of a will made during a lucid interval, have looked into the will to see whether its dispositions were consistent with the dictates of the natural affections of the testator, or the contrary, and have used the inferences arising from such dispositions, as evidence of the existence or non-existence of a lucid interval. Thus, in Cartwright v. Cartwright, (1 Phil. 90), the will of a woman who was admitted to be generally insane, any of whom the witnesses deposed, that, while writing her will, her behaviour was that of an insane person, was, nevertheless, upheld; and the circumstance, that it was a proper and natural will, appears to have been not without weight. So, in a case cited by Lord Eldon in M'Adam v. Walker, (1 Dow, 178); while, on the contrary, in Clark v. Lear and Scarwell, (cited 1 Phil. 119), where a will was made by an insane person, such will, although orderly and regularly made, yet, not being a natural one, that is, being made in favour of a person whom the testator had no cause to benefit, was not held to furnish proof of a lucid interval. These cases certainly shew, that, to some extent, the Court has looked at rectitude or perversion of the moral feelings, as affording indications of sanity or insanity.

We now proceed to another branch of the question, viz. what are the grounds on which a judicial opinion can be formed as to the state of mind of a testator. We conceive, that the question, what constitutes insanity, is not a question of law, but of fact. If we turn to the older cases, in which the doctrine of insanity has been discussed, the very authorities on which the Court relied in Freer v. Peacock, we find, that, in those cases, the Court treats the question as one of fact, and, in forming its conclusion as to what constitutes insanity, relies very much upon the evidence of persons of medical science. In the great case of Dew v. Clark, Sir J. Nicholl uses this language:—"As far as my own observation and experience can direct me, aided by opinions and statements I have heard expressed in society, guided also by what has occurred in these and in other courts of justice, or has been laid down by medical and legal writers, the true criterion is, where there is delusion of mind, there is insanity, &c. Medical writers have laid down the same criterion by which insanity may be known." And then his Honor goes on to quote Dr. Battie, Mr. Locke, and Dr. Willis, to shew what are the ingredients and tests of insanity. So that, after all, the Court founded its notion of the legal definition of insanity, on conclusions drawn from the statements or opinions of medical and metaphysical writers on the question of fact, what is insanity. When, therefore, in Freer v. Peacock, the Court treats it as settled that there can be no insanity in the eye of the law except where there is intellectual delusion, as distinguished from moral perversion,—when it treats this as settled law upon the ground that there has been "no case decided in a court of law where moral perversion of the feelings, unaccompanied with delusion, has been held a sufficient ground to invalidate and nullify the acts of one so affected,"—we conceive, with very great submission, that the Court is not putting the law on its true grounds; that it is attributing to the law the adoption, as of its own authority, of some standard by which to define what shall be held insanity, instead of attributing to it the course which it really has pursued,—that of adopting conclusions drawn from the existing state of scientific knowledge, as to what is in fact insanity. Of course insanity must have been always the same; that is to say, the same state of mind cannot have been in one age diseased and in another healthy; but it is perfectly possible, and, indeed, it is the fact, that that which, from the imperfect state of science, has at one time not been known to be a diseased state of the mind, has at a subsequent period been discovered to be so. It is well known, for instance, that, in the middle ages, many pursuits were held to be indicative of insanity which are now known to be perfectly consistent with health of the mind; and vice versa, certain states of mind, particularly those marked by great religious exaltation, were considered to be the result of inspirations from Heaven, or at least the manifestations of superior holiness, which would now be recognised as proceeding simply from disease of the brain. Applying this to a period nearer to our own, we find that the scientific investigators of mental disease, until lately, did not entertain the idea that there could be a morbid state of the mind unaccompanied by intellectual delusion; hence they stated as a fact that the test of insanity was intellectual delusion. In the progress of science it has been discovered, or at least some men of no trivial scientific reputation have believed they have discovered, that there is another form of mental disease, affecting, not the understanding, but the feelings. They have termed such disease moral insanity, and they have argued and produced facts to shew that such a state of mind is morbid; that is, amounts to mental disease or insanity, although there may be no illusion or belief of any unreal and imaginary facts. Now it may be that these men are wrong in their scientific conclusions. It may be, that they are wrong in stating, as a fact, that a perverted state of the feelings is the result of disease of the mind; and it may be, that if it is the result of disease of the mind, still such a disease is not incompatible with the possession and exercise, with full volition, of those faculties of the mind which are requisite to make a will. But all these considerations are, we conceive, questions of scientific fact, in which a court of law cannot lay down any positive definition of its own authority, but must rely, as it does, in respect to all other matters of science, on the testimony of witnesses who from their study of the subject are best qualified to form an opinion.

The conclusion is, that there is no rule of law which makes it necessary to adopt as the only test of insanity, intellectual delusion. The law has, down to the case of Dew v. Clark, adopted that as the test of insanity, because it found that science then adopted that, and no other, as the test. But the principle of Dew v. Clark was, to treat insanity or no insanity, as a question of fact, and to ascertain from evidence what then was understood to constitute insanity. If then since Dew v. Clark another test of insanity has been discovered, we apprehend, that, consistently with authority and consistently with common sense, the law must adopt the new test as well as the old one, as a fact; and the conclusion is, that, in Freer v. Peacock, the decision is either wrong, or, if right, is put upon wrong grounds. If the new doctrine is true as a matter of science; if there is in fact a moral insanity; and if in fact such insanity draws after it the consequences attendant upon intellectual delusion, viz. an incapacity for the healthy exercise of volition as applied to those qualities of the mind requisite for making a will, then of course the decision is wrong, as being a verdict against evidence. If the new doctrine is not sufficiently supported by facts and reasoning, to be relied on as a statement of a fact, then we say, with great deference, the decision is put upon wrong grounds, because it is put upon the ground that whatever may be the medical doctrine, the law knows no insanity unaccompanied by intellectual delusion; whereas it ought to have been put upon the ground that the evidence of the fact of insanity was insufficient. The distinction is very material, because, if the Court is right on the ground on which it has put the decision in Freer v. Peacock, no amount of belief in mankind generally in the existence of moral insanity, no amount of evidence of its existence, or of its consequences upon the exercise of the faculties of the mind, can ever justify a different decision.

The third and last branch of the inquiry to which we shall very shortly address ourselves is, whether the true question to be solved in cases of this kind is not, whether the mental disease of the testator, by whatever name it may be designated, and whatever may be its special manifestations, be not such as to afford a strong inference against his capacity to apply his faculties to the making of a will; whether, in fact, a will made by a person labouring under such mental disease, can be taken to express the intentions which the testator would have had, if he had been wholly sane. And if the answer be in the negative, then it follows that the proof of the existence of such mental disease in the testator, ought to avoid his will. Now, it should be recollected, that, in the matter of making of a will, the two classes of mental faculties, the existence of which is not denied, viz. the intellectual and moral faculties, are both necessarily called into action. The recollection of what property the testator has, and the arrangements appertaining to its disposition, come within the functions of the understanding. But the selection of the recipients of the testator's bounty, is altogether within the domain of the moral faculties, or, what are in common language termed, the feelings. These are the mental instruments with which the testator must make his calculations of the relative claims to his bounty, of all those of whose existence and claims he has knowledge; and when it is admitted that a testator's moral feelings are perverted, or that he is wholly or partially without any such feelings, it is admitted, in fact, that he is without, or has only in a perverted and distorted state, some of the mental qualities which are essential to impressing upon a will all the marks of a whole and sane mind. What is the necessary inference? That the will of such a person ought not to be taken to be the offspring of a whole and sane mind. C. S. D.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Formerly, the Court of Queen's Bench would not grant a mandamus commanding justices to do an act which might probably render them liable to an action, unless it appeared to be a matter in which they had a clear legal right to act; and if there was any doubt on the subject, they would refuse the writ. (Re v. Tyford, 5 Adol. & Ell. 430; Re v. Hales, 3 Adol. & Ell. 492; R. v. Newcomb, 6 T. R. 368; and see Weaver v. Price, 3 B. & Adol. 409). Therefore, where an application was made to justices to grant a warrant of distress for enforcing payment from the rector of the parish of a composition in lieu of statute-duty, as occupier of the tithes, it appearing doubtful whether the rector was properly chargeable with it, the Court refused to award a mandamus. Abbott, C. J., said, "It is manifest, if we granted a mandamus commanding the justices to issue a warrant of distress, the rector would bring an action to try the validity of that which we had ordered to be done. I have always felt great reluctance to order anything to be done by a magistrate which may subject him to an action of which the issue is doubtful. If the fear of an action appeared to be a mere pretence, and to have no reasonable foundation, we should not listen to it; but here there is so much doubt, that I am of opinion we ought not to grant a mandamus. (Re v. The Justices of Buckinghamshire, 1 B. & C. 485; S. C., 2 D. & R. 689). So, where an application was made to a magistrate to enforce a conviction by warrant against a waterman who had been convicted in a penalty before two of the overseers and rulers of the Watermen's Company, under the stat. 34 Geo. 3, c. 65, s. 9, which he refused, it being doubtful whether the testimony should have been taken on oath, the Court refused a mandamus to compel him. (Re v. Broderip, 5 B. & C. 239; S. C., 7 D. & R. 861; see also Re v. Robinson, 2 Smith's Rep. 274; Ex parte Fielding, 8 Dowl. P. C. 635). So, where an application was made to justices to issue a warrant of distress for a poor-rate, which they refused; it appearing that the rate had not been published on the first Sunday after it was allowed, the Court considered it invalid on this account, and refused a mandamus to the justices, notwithstanding the rate had been appealed against, and the appeal dismissed. (Re v. Newcomb, 6 T. R. 368; Re v. Dyer and Another, 2 Adol. & Ell. 606). So, where it appeared doubtful whether the party rated to the relief of the poor was clearly liable to be so, the Court refused a mandamus to compel the justices to issue a distress warrant to levy the amount. (Re v. The Justices of Middlesex, 2 Lord Ken. 163; see also Re v. Hughes, 3 Adol. & Ell. 425; Re v. Sillifant, 4 Adol. & Ell. 354; but see Re v. Trecrothick, 2 Adol. & Ell. 405). So, where an application was made for a mandamus to compel a justice to grant a warrant of distress for a highway rate, upon shewing cause against the rule, it appeared doubtful whether the occupier of the lands sought to be charged was liable to contribute to the repair of the parish highways, the Court refused the writ, saying, "We are not to subject the magistrate to risk by compelling him to perform an act, where we see a legal probability that an action will be brought against him for doing it." (Re v. Greame, 2 Adol. & Ell. 615; and see Re v. Morgan, Id. 618, n.; S. C., 3 Nev. & M. 68; Re v. The Justices of Buckinghamshire, 2 D. & R. 689; Re v. Mirehouse and Elton, 2 Adol. & Ell. 632; Re v. St. George's, Hanover-square, 8 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 18, acc. See also Re v. Trecrothick, 2 Adol. & Ell. 405; Re v. The Justices of Middlesex, 2 Lord Ken. 163; Re v. Freeman, Id. 19, semb. cont.). A most important alteration has recently been made, which no doubt will render the Court of Queen's Bench less scrupulous in awarding writs of mandamus to justices, although a doubt may exist as to their jurisdiction in the particular matter. By stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 3, it is enacted, "that no action, suit, or any other proceeding shall be commenced or prosecuted against any person or persons whatsoever, for or by reason of anything done in obedience to any preceptory writ of mandamus issued by any Court having authority to issue writs of mandamus." It appears, the Court will not award a mandamus to justices directing them to issue a warrant of distress to levy a poor-rate on certain persons who have refused to pay, unless there has been a previous summons, although they will direct a mandamus to the justices to issue their summons, and hear the complaint, if necessary. Lord Kenyon, C. J., said; "A summons must precede a warrant of distress, which is in the nature of an execution on the summons; the party may shew a sufficient reason to the magistrates why a warrant of distress should not issue." (Re v. Bruce, 6 T. R. 198). So, where a party had been convicted in a penalty of 5s. for not pruning hedges hanging over a highway, and upon his continued refusal the surveyor employed a party to do so, the Court refused a mandamus to the justices to issue a distress for the sum expended, because it was not shewn that it had been demanded of the party. (Ex parte Wilmshurst, 8 Dowl. P. C. 431; see 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 65). Where a parish had been divided into three districts, each of which had maintained its own poor, and had separate overseers for each, and afterwards the three agreed to unite, and continued so united for more than thirty years, and four overseers were appointed for the whole parish, upon application to the Court for a mandamus to appoint separate overseers, as before the union, the Court refused the application. (Re v. Palmer, 8 East, 416; see also Re v. Walsall, 2 B. & Ald. 157). And where an application was made to the justices to grant a license for an alehouse, which they refused, the Court of King's Bench, on application, refused to grant a mandamus, although, it was suggested, the decision of the justices proceeded from a mistaken view of their jurisdiction. (Re v. Farrinon, 4 D. & R. 735; Giles' case, 2 Str. 881; Re v. Nottingham, Say. Rep. 217; Re v. Storry, (5 D. & R. 308). So the Court refused a mandamus to justices requiring them to rate some parish in the county in aid of a parish in an adjoining borough having an exclusive jurisdiction, because the county magistrates could not legally do so. (Re v. Holbeck, 4 T. R. 778; Re v. The Justices of Gateshead, 6 Adol. & Ell. 550, n.). So where a conviction had been appealed against and confirmed, and afterwards removed by a certiorari, and quashed for a defect in the information, the Court of King's Bench refused a mandamus to compel the magistrates to proceed on the original information, saying that it would be obliging the defendants to answer twice for the same offence. (Re v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 625). So, a mandamus was refused to justices to make a rate to reimburse two of the inhabitants their expenses incurred in defending an indictment for not repairing a bridge. (Anon., 1 Str. 63; see also, Re v. The Justices of Lancashire, 12 East, 366). The Court of Queen's Bench has not jurisdiction to grant a mandamus to justices to make an order of maintenance on a particular parish. Therefore, where a woman, by an order of two justices, was directed to be removed to the place of her last legal settlement, but in consequence of her advanced state of pregnancy the order was suspended, and she was delivered of a bastard in the parish of C., and afterwards married the putative father of the child, who with his wife became chargeable to the parish of S., the Court, on application, refused to grant a mandamus to the justices, commanding them to make an order of maintenance on the overseers of the poor of the parish of C. Abbott, C. J., said, "It is the ordinary practice of this Court to grant this writ to compel magistrates to hear and determine a case in which they have jurisdiction to hear, but have refused altogether to exercise it; but there is not an instance which can be cited where the Court have granted a mandamus to justices to compel them to come to any particular decision, which would be the case if we were upon the present occasion to order them to make an order of maintenance upon the parish of C. (Res v. The Justices of Middlesex, 4 B. & Adol. 296; see also, Res v. The Corporation of Eye, Id. 271; Res v. The Mayor of Tyuro, 3 Id. 590). So, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to justices to sign a pass to remove an Irish female pauper and her bastard child, born in England, being within nurture, to Ireland. (Res v. Bennett and Another, 2 B. & Adol. 712). It seems the mother may be sent, but the child cannot. So, the Court refused a mandamus to justices to order a rate to be levied to reimburse inhabitants of a borough certain damages and costs they had to pay in actions brought against them on the 57 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 38, for damage done by rioters, the Court stating as a reason, that, in the first place, they did not consider the inhabitants of a town within the statutes; secondly, that even if they were, the application should have been made to the justices at sessions and not to magistrates out of sessions. (Res v. The Justices of Lynn, 3 B. & C. 147; S. C., 4 D. & R. 778). So, the Court refused a mandamus to a justice out of sessions to produce depositions taken before him on a charge of felony, for the purpose of founding an indictment for perjury against the deponents; the proper course being to subpoena the justice to produce them, when they might be read in evidence before the grand jury. (Res v. The Justices of Bedford, 1 Chitt. 627; see Res v. Smith, 1 Stra. 126; Welch v. Richards, Barnes, 468; Ex parte Fletcher, 13 Law J., N. S., M. C., 67). And where two justices refused to grant a summons against a clothier, upon the application of the owner of a scribbling and carding mill, to whom he was indebted for work done by him for the clothier, conceiving that the case did not come within the statute for settling disputes between clothiers and persons employed in such manufactures, the Court of King's Bench, coinciding with the opinion of the justices, refused a mandamus to compel them, and discharged the rule, with costs. (Res v. Haywood, 1 M. & S. 624). Where a summons was applied for under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 51, and the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 79, against an officer in the employ of the Birmingham Railway Company, for refusing to allow a cabman to come within the enclosed gate of the station, and thereby preventing him from obtaining a fare, but the magistrate would not grant it, on the ground of his not having jurisdiction, the Court of Queen's Bench refused a mandamus to the justice commanding him to issue the summons, considering it a matter of so much doubt whether or not the magistrate had jurisdiction over the matter. (Reg. v. Rawlinson, 8 Jur. 108).

In 2 vols. royal 12mo., price 1l. 18s. boards, the FIFTH EDITION of GRANT'S CHANCERY PRACTICE, composed anew, and according to all the existing Operative Orders of Court, including the last of 8th May, 1845.

In six very thick octavo Volumes, price 6l. 10s. in strong cloth bds. BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE of the Essex District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner Bere; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Notes.

LONDON, MAY 22, 1847.

Written on several occasions in the pages of this Journal, I discussed the question of legal education, and our attention is again called to the subject, by a dissertation in the form of letters, proceeding from the pen of a member of the Irish bar*. In England there is, properly and accurately speaking, no such thing as legal education, at least for the bar, if by legal education is meant, as is usually understood, a preliminary intellectual training, essential to qualify a person to be a member of the bar. Any person of any class, except one†, and of any amount of education, or rather of any amount of ignorance, who can command 100*l.*, may become a member of one of the inns of court, which gives him an inchoate right to become a member of the bar.

The way that this inchoate right is expanded, and perfected into an absolute right, is literally, and not merely figuratively, by eating. Nothing is essential as a qualification to being called to the bar, except having in some of the inns of court (the Inner Temple for instance) actually eaten a certain number of dinners, and in certain others, having presented one's self and put his name down in a book kept by the butler, at the time when dinners are going to be eaten. At the Inner Temple the ordeal is not severe, because the dinners are, or at least were in our time, not bad. What they were or are, at the other inns of court, we are not able to state; but certainly the only test, which was and is unavoidable at all the four inns of court, is not intellectual.

* "Letters on the present State of Legal Education in England and Ireland. By Henry Holmes Jay, Esq., Barrister." Dublin: Hodges & Smith; and London: Maxwell & Son. 1847.

† The only class of her Majesty's subjects excluded from admission to study for the bar, is that of persons who have been barrister's clerks.

Such as it is, this system has flourished for many centuries, and under it, or in spite of it, learned and able lawyers have made their appearance as occasion called for them. Hence it has been concluded that the system is not a bad one; and hence by a progressive mode of conservative reasoning, it has been concluded that no change could be for the better. The truth seems to be this, that there being no systematic and authorised course of legal education, necessity has dictated a sort of course, which is more or less strictly adhered to under the influence of custom, and which being dictated by practical necessity, is more or less practically effective. But like all other things regulated by the piecemeal dictation of practical wants, it lacks the unity of purpose, the philosophical arrangement, the rational connection of a system based on observation and reflection, and scientifically arranged. To say the least of it, an infinity of time is wasted by most young men commencing the study of the law, in reading either wrong books, or right books in the wrong order; and it really is utterly absurd to pretend that the intellectual standard of the bar would not be greatly raised, if there were superadded to the energy and industry that are developed in the persons of those who are aspirants for admission to its ranks, the benefits of a steady, classified, and systematic course of legal education.

Such a course is pursued in every civilised country in Europe; such a course is pursued in America; and the propriety of such a course is beginning to be felt in England and Ireland. Indeed, nothing but that pertinacious adherence to custom, and hatred of every thing bearing the appearance of a theory, which peculiarly distinguish the English people, would have so long prevented us from seeing that every reason which applies to those professions in which, for generations, a systematic course of education has been pursued, applies equally to the legal profession.

No one ever dreams, for instance, of its being fitting that young men should become ministers of the Church, until they have undergone a regular course of intellectual training for their profession. No one dreams of a commission in the artillery or engineers being given to any young man, until he has gone through certain prescribed courses of mathematical and military education. The same may be said with regard to both branches of the medical profession. The Bar is really, we believe, the only profession in this country, in which it is the practice to leave the student to grope his way as best he can, with or without the advice of friends; always without the advice or assistance of any constituted guides; without, in fact, any standard or settled course of education. It is sometimes answered to this sort of censure upon the existing no-system of legal education, that although, by reason of there being no preliminary training, very incompetent men may become members of the bar, the ranks of the working bar cannot be filled by incompetent men, because those who do not qualify themselves will not obtain employment. But, in reply, we should say in the first place, the proposition, however plausible, is not true. It is not the fact that no incompetent men obtain employment. It is natural that when young men are thrust into the Profession, as many are, simply because their friends have business at their disposal, such young men should rely upon their connection, and that their friends should, for the sake of their own credit and to avoid the charge of helpless relatives, supply them, so far as they dare, with business. And it is notoriously the fact, that great numbers of young men do go to the bar, relying not upon their acquirements, but upon their friends, and that numbers of men are to be found at the bar and in business, who are almost painfully incompetent, and who, if they had been subjected to a regular and systematic training, would have either improved under it, and been much better men than they are, or would have found the ordeal too trying for their supine nerves and sluggish brains, and would have withdrawn from a profession for which nature never intended them. In the second place, although it is a very important matter to the public, as well as to the individuals themselves, that men should not be at the bar who are unable to fulfil its duties, yet that is not the only question. It is also a matter of great importance, that men of fitting abilities should not waste years of their lives in acquiring useless knowledge, or, for want of systematic guidance, in setting about the acquisition of useful knowledge in an unprofitable way. Yet such is most unquestionably the result of the present totally unsystematic mode in which studying for the bar is conducted.

We do not certainly desire to see quite so Procrustean a bed of learning introduced in this country, as that on which, according to Mr. Joy, (see pp. 22 et seq.), the Prussian law student is stretched. Such very minute and impassable regulations would not suit the genius of the people, or of the institutions of this country. But there is a wide difference between making the Bar a corps of government officers, and leaving students for the bar without any sort of guidance; and we cannot but agree with those who think it highly desirable that the authorities of the several inns of court should establish something like effective schools of law, in which young men shall be trained for the bar, under a regular, and tolerably severe course of study.

The space to which we are confined in this journal does not admit of that minute inquiry which would be requisite for discussing what would be a beneficial system of legal education; nor, indeed, has the time arrived for entering upon such a discussion. For although the attention of the public and the Profession is beginning to be turned to the subject, neither the Profession nor the public can be thought to be yet fully alive to its importance. If they were, more would have been done in the way of making a practical beginning in legal education. At present, beyond the appointment of a reader to lecture at the Middle Temple, very little has been done*.

A COLLECTION OF THE REAL PROPERTY STATUTES passed in the Reigns of William IV and Victoria. With explanatory notes, containing short statements of the decided points, and a full reference to all the Cases upon each enactment down to the period of publication, Index, &c. By WILLIAM F. BROWELL, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

THE LAWYER'S COMMON-PLACE BOOK, arranged upon a New Plan; with an Alphabetical Index of upwards of Seven Hundred Heads, which occur in Professional Reading and Practice. Price 10*s*. 6*d*.; or, the large size, 1*l*s.

"As I read, I formed a Common-place Book, which has been of great use to me even to the present day. It is, indeed, the only way in which law reports can be read with much advantage."—Sir Samuel Romilly.

"We have no doubt the student who diligently reads it will have reason to rejoice in his labours."—Legal Observer.

A LAW LEXICON; OR, DICTIONARY OF JURISPRUDENCE: explaining all the Technical Words and Phrases employed in the several Departments of English Law; including, also, the various Legal Terms used in Commercial Transactions; together with an Explanatory as well as Literal Translation of the Latin Maxims contained in the Writings of the Ancient and Modern Commentators. By J. J. S. WHARTON, Esq., B. C. L., of St. Mary Hall, Oxon, &c.

The Publishers, in submitting this Work to the Profession, take leave to remark, that it is not a compilation from previous Law Word-books, (as a comparison will prove), but a Work that the Author has entirely written, after research into the best authorities, and study of classical and ancient literature. The subjects (many of which are elaborate) have been treated according to the latest alterations; and, besides the constructed and illustrated Latin Maxims, there will be found numerous articles and phrases never before inducted into a Law Dictionary.

"It is a Work that has long been wanted, for the existing Law Dictionaries have, in consequence of the numerous recent alterations in the law, become almost obsolete. Mr. Wharton gives, in this Law Lexicon, an Explanation of all the Technical Words and Phrases employed in the several departments of English law, including the various legal terms used in commercial transactions; together with an explanatory as well as literal translation of the Latin maxims contained in the writings of the ancient and modern Commentators."—Sun.

INDEX LEGUM for 1847; OR, INDEX OF LEGAL SUBJECTS: to aid the Student and practical Lawyer in easily registering and readily referring to his professional reading and practice. Price 20*s*. in calf; with patent lock, 2*s*.

"There has been long wanting, both for the student and the practitioner, an Index in which they may set down alphabetically short references to the more important parts of the works they study—the result of their reading and their research, and such notes, queries, and hints as they may wish to preserve for further investigation. The present work supplies this want. The plan is good, and well adapted to the purpose. The Introduction is well written, and clearly explains the proper method of concisely making the entries; and the examples given shew the utility."—Legal Observer.

LONDON, MAY 29, 1847.

THE numerous lines of railway projected during the last year, and the extensive dealings which were had in regard to them, have given rise, as might have been expected, to many questions of a legal character. The rights and liabilities of the parties who had engaged in railway speculation were confused and unadjusted. They have been compelled to have recourse to the law,—the usual result of a state of public excitement; and not only the battle of the gauges, but also the battle of allottees, shareholders, engineers, advertising agents, and of provisional and managing committee-men, has now been fought in Westminster Hall. The contests have been carried on with spirit, and victory, after shifting from side to side, has at length become more certain by the frequent engagements which have taken place.

Among other important additions to what we may now term "railway law," is the case of Wontner v. Shairp, recently reported in our pages, (11 Jur. 373). It may be regarded as a warning, so necessary in these times, against the publication of falsehood, shewing that advertisements and prospectuses relating to a public company require a foundation for the statements contained in them, and that a serious responsibility is incurred by those who, having assumed a superintending position, yet allow them to issue with allegations contrary to the truth.

The facts were briefly these:—In 1845, a prospectus was issued by a railway company, stating the capital to be 3,000,000*l.*, in 120,000 shares of 25*l.* each, and that if Parliament did not sanction the undertaking, the deposits, after deducting the necessary expenses, would be returned. The plaintiff applied for shares, and they were allotted to him by letter, "on condition" that he paid the deposits by a certain day; in default whereof they were to be forfeited. This letter was headed with the amount of capital as in the prospectus. Before the day appointed for the payment of the deposit, an advertisement was published by the managing committee, to the effect that the allotment was completed, and that the applications of many persons had been passed over, because it was necessary to give the preference to applicants locally interested. There was some evidence to shew that the plaintiff saw this advertisement; and he subsequently paid the deposit. The committee had, in fact, allotted no more than 58,000 shares, although applications had been made by responsible persons for the 120,000. The plaintiff afterwards executed the subscription deed, which authorised the committee to pay the expenses out of the subscriptions. The deposits, except 400*l.*, were expended, and there were no funds to go to Parliament with. On the 15th December, the plaintiff attended a meeting of the shareholders, in which resolutions were adopted to allot further shares, but he objected thereto, and moved as an amendment, that the deposits should be returned, which, however, the chairman refused to put to the meeting. The undertaking was afterwards abandoned.

The action was brought against one of the committee of management by the plaintiff, to recover back the deposit he had paid; and on these facts, and the finding of the jury that he had been induced to pay it by the fraudulent misrepresentation of the defendant, he was held entitled to recover.

The judgment of the Court proceeded upon the ground, that there was evidence to warrant the jury in finding that the statements in the advertisement amounted to a fraudulent misrepresentation, which was a material inducement to the plaintiff to pay his money; and they also decided that no previous valid contract existed by which the plaintiff had bound himself to pay the money, inasmuch as the allotment was in a company having a less capital than that in which the shares were applied for; and also that, although the application was absolute in its terms, the acceptance of it was conditional; that the subscription deed being signed through such misrepresentation, did not bar the plaintiff of his remedy; and that the attending the meeting on the 15th December, and acting as he there did, was not a waiver of such remedy.

With regard to the question of misrepresentation, Wilde, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "It might be reasonable to expect that such an undertaking would succeed with a capital of 3,000,000., but absurd to suppose it could be accomplished for half that sum. The plaintiff having asked for shares in a practicable scheme, received shares in one that was impracticable. . . . We think there was ample evidence of such misrepresentation. If we are to construe the advertisement, we think it means all the shares had been allotted; and as it was a public advertisement, at least, it must be taken to have been addressed to all who were interested in the subject-matter, of whom the plaintiff undoubtedly was one. To him it represents that he had got what he asked for, that is, sixty shares of the 120,000 in the proposed adventure; the jury were, therefore, well warranted in finding the representation so made was a material inducement to the plaintiff to pay his money."

In answer to the objection, that the plaintiff, by attending the meeting, had waived his right to rescind the contract, on the ground of misrepresentation, the Court said, "The only act done by the plaintiff at the meeting was to propose, that, in consequence of the allotment of only 58,000, all the deposits should be returned; and the argument comes to this, that, having tried to induce others to join him in claiming the deposit, and failing in that attempt, he shall not be permitted to do so by himself. No such doctrine as that is to be found in Campbell v. Fleming, or in any other decided case that we are aware of. The plaintiff did no act at the meeting, or afterwards, shewing his assent to be treated as a shareholder."

This decision will probably expose to much litigation the promoters and managing committee-men of defunct railway schemes, as the facts divulged in Wontner v. Shairp are by no means peculiar to that case. In very many instances, the applicant received an allotment in a company of vast capital, according to the prospectus; an advertisement appeared, to the effect that all the shares were allotted; the deed was signed, the deposits were paid and expended, the undertaking was abandoned, and then it was discovered that about half of the actual number of shares had been allotted, the remainder having been reserved for the remuneration of the committee, or for the purpose of keeping the scrip at a premium in the market. But, although the cases may thus agree in their main facts, we apprehend, that much difficulty will occur in future actions founded upon Wontner v. Shairp, and that the analogy will often fail in some material part.

The question as to the validity of the contract is for the judge to decide, and may be answered with some certainty, as a point of law, before the case is taken into court; but the question as to fraudulent misrepresentation, and its forming a material inducement for the payment of money, is for the jury, and must depend upon the special circumstances of each case. This will probably be the chief difficulty with which plaintiffs will have to contend. We take it, that it will be essential to the plaintiff's success, that he should shew to the satisfaction of the jury, subject to the direction of the judge as to the principles which govern legal fraud, that he paid his money under a fraudulent misrepresentation. And if the jury find this, he will, it seems, be entitled to recover, whether the undertaking be abandoned or not, as it is not a failure of consideration, but fraud, of which he complains.

Nockells v. Crosby (3 B. & C. 814) and Kempson v. Saunders (4 Bing. 5) turned upon the abortiveness of certain projects, and decided, that the expenses incurred in them should fall upon the original projectors. Walstab v. Spottiswoode (4 Railw. Cas. 321; 10 Jur. 460, 498) was also a case of failure of consideration, in which there was not only evidence from which the jury might infer the abandonment of the scheme, but, in addition thereto, the plaintiff had paid the deposit, and yet could not obtain the scrip.

We understand, that there is a case (Garwood v. Moore) now pending in the Exchequer Chamber, raising the questions which were decided by the Court of Exchequer in Walstab v. Spottiswoode.

But the principal case, which we are considering, is rather founded on the well-known rule, that money obtained by fraud is recoverable in an action for money had and received, independently of questions of deposits, allottees, or railway companies. The doctrine relating to fraudulent misrepresentation was well considered in Small v. Attwood, (2 Jur. 245).

It is, however, very important to bear in mind that even fraud may be waived. The election on the part of the defrauded party to rescind the contract must be exercised by him, when he discovers the fraud. If after it has come to his knowledge, he deals with the subject-matter of the contract, he cannot repudiate it. He is looked upon as recognising the contract in its altered form and circumstances, and the rule applies even although he should subsequently discover further circumstances connected with the same fraud. (Campbell v. Fleming, 1 Adol. & Ell. 40; Selway v. Fogg, 5 Mee. & W. 86; Miles v. Dell, 3 Stark. 25).

In Campbell v. Fleming, the plaintiff had bought shares in a mining company, in consequence of an advertisement and representation made to him, which he afterwards discovered were fraudulent. The whole scheme was a deception. Subsequently, however, he formed a new company, by consolidating these shares with other property, and he sold shares in the new company. It was held that he could not recover back his money, as he continued to deal with the shares as his own, after discovery of the fraud, and it was said by Parke, J., "After the plaintiff, knowing of the fraud, had elected to treat the transaction as a contract, he had lost his right of rescinding it, and the fraud could do no more than entitle him to rescind." "He should at the time of discovering the fraud," said Mr. Justice Patteson, "have elected to repudiate the whole transaction. Instead of doing so, he deals with that for which he now says he never legally contracted."

And in Selway v. Fogg it was said by Parke, B.—“Assuming that the jury have properly found that this contract was fraudulent, in what situation is the plaintiff put? He may repudiate it and be in the same situation as if it had no existence at all. . . . If the plaintiff chooses to treat the defendant as a party who has contracted with him, he must be bound by the only contract made between them.”

So in Wontner v. Shairp, if the plaintiff had signed the deed after he had discovered the fraud, or if he had assented to the resolutions proposed at the meeting, or taken any part there, save that of a dissentient, it would appear that he could not afterwards have rescinded the contract on the ground of fraud. In many instances allottees have received back a portion of their deposits, and it may be questionable whether they have not thereby precluded themselves from objecting to fraud where it may have existed. But in an action to recover the full amount of the deposit, not on the ground of fraud, but of failure of consideration, if it were clearly shewn that the scheme was abandoned, and that the plaintiff had not received any benefit for his money, it would seem that the bare agreement to take a portion of the deposits in satisfaction of the whole could not be set up as a defence. This would be upon the well-established principle, that accord without satisfaction is no answer to an action. (Com. Dig. “Accord,” (B.) 4). And even if the amount agreed upon had been received, this could not, as a general rule, be pleaded in satisfaction of a greater demand. In cases, however, where the subscription-deed has been signed, and there is no evidence of fraud, that will probably be found to afford a defence. It was not necessary to decide this last-mentioned point in Wontner v. Shairp, as it was admitted, that, if the money was paid under a fraudulent misrepresentation, the deed was signed from a similar cause.

In conclusion we may observe, that the decision in Wontner v. Shairp has some bearing upon the case of Woolmer v. Toby, now pending for judgment in the Court of Queen’s Bench, inasmuch as one of the points of defence raised therein to the claim against the defendant as an allottee for the deposit-money, was, that a portion only (36,460) of the entire number of shares (40,000) had been allotted.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

It seems to be clear from what has preceded, that although the Court of Queen’s Bench has a kind of visitatorial jurisdiction over justices at sessions in the exercise of their discretionary powers, still, where the sessions have authority by law to adjudicate, and a matter has been adjudicated upon, the Court cannot interfere by compelling them to review their judgment, however erroneous it may be, or come to any particular decision upon the subject of an appeal. (R. v. The Justices of Carnarvon, 4 B. & Ald. 87, per Bayley, J.; Reg. v. The Justices of West Riding of Yorkshire, 1 New Sess. Cas. 247; Re Pratt, 7 Ad. & Ell. 27; see R. v. The Inhabitants of Frieston, 5 B. & Ad. 597; R. v. The Justices of Cumberland, 4 Ad. & Ell. 695). Therefore, where, on appeal against an order of removal, the chairman of the quarter sessions, after hearing the evidence, pronounced the judgment of the Court by confirming the order, but they afterwards discovered that one of the justices present made the order, and, by a rule of the sessions, was incapacitated from giving an opinion, his vote was withdrawn, when the majority was against confirming the order, and instead of being confirmed was quashed. Judgment was accordingly entered by the clerk of the peace for quashing the order, who did not perceive that the votes of the remaining justices were equal, in which case it ought, by a rule of sessions, to have been adjourned. Shortly after the sessions, an application was made to the chairman to rectify the mistake, but this he refused. The Court of King’s Bench was applied to, but, nevertheless, they would not grant a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances, and hear the appeal at their next quarter sessions. Ellenborough, C. J., said, “If this application were entertained, the consequence would be that this Court would have on all occasions to look, not to the record alone, but to extraneous matter, in order to see how the judgment of the justices at sessions was obtained. The Court will not do this; nor, when judgment has been finally pronounced, will they hold a sort of balloting box, to ascertain the votes that were given, or whether they were correctly cast up. If no judgment had been pronounced, the Court might have interposed; but here there is a judgment.” (R. v. The Justices of Leicestershire, 1 M. & S. 442; see R. v. The Justices of Essex, 2 Chit. 385; Ex parte Ackworth, 1 D. & L. 718). So, where on the trial of an appeal against an order of removal, the justices were equally divided in opinion upon a question of fact on which the settlement of the paper depended, the sessions, conceiving that it lay on the respondents’ parish to establish their case to the satisfaction of a majority of the Court, quashed the order, instead of adjourning the appeal, the Court of King’s Bench, however, refused to grant a mandamus. (R. v. The Justices of Monmouthshire, 4 B. & C. 844; S. C. 7 D. & R. 384). And where an application was made for a mandamus to compel the justices at quarter sessions to alter the judgment of the quarter sessions as recorded by making a special entry on their record of the reasons of their judgment, the Court discharged the rule. Abbott, C. J., said, “The difficulty in the way of this application is to shew that we have any authority to grant it. No instance has been cited in which this Court by mandamus ever ordered a Court of inferior jurisdiction to give their reasons for their particular judgment. Although our powers are great, they are not unlimited; they are bounded by some lines of demarcation. I am not aware that we have any power to interfere with the jurisdiction of the Court below in the way suggested; and as the counsel has not been able to cite an instance of the kind, it appears to me that this application cannot be sustained. (R. v. The Justices of Devon, 1 Chit. 34; R. v. The Rector of St. James, 2 Adol. & Ell. 241; R. v. The Justices of Lancashire, 3 Q. B. Rep. 367). Nor will the Court grant a mandamus to dismiss an appeal, (R. v. The Justices of Wilts, 2 Chit. 267), to quash a rate, (R. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 9 Ad. & Ell. 540), or to grant a case, (Reg. v. Jarvis, 9 Dowl. 120). So the Court have refused a mandamus to compel the justices at sessions to make a special entry that an order was quashed upon appeal for an informality. (R. v. The Justices of Lancashire, supra). Where, on notice of appeal against an order of removal, the respondents, finding their examinations insufficient, gave the appellants notice that they intended to abandon their order for those reasons, and should move at sessions to quash the order on a special entry, “quashed not on the merits,” and that they were ready to pay the costs of maintenance, &c.; the appellants, notwithstanding, gave notice of trial, and attended the sessions with witnesses; the respondents produced none, but moved to quash the order on the grounds stated, which the sessions did; on motion for a mandamus to the sessions to erase the entry, the Court held that the entry was regular, and refused the mandamus. (Ex parte The Overseers of Pontefract, 3 Q. B. Rep. 391; Ex parte Wellinborough, 15 Law J., M. C., 20; Ex parte Overseers of Ackworth, 13 Law J., M. C., 38). It seems, however, that, if the sessions make a false entry on their records, the Court will compel them by mandamus to erase it. (R. v. The Justices of West Riding, Yorkshire, 12 Law J., M. C., 148). So the Court refused a mandamus to compel the justices at quarter sessions to review their decision on an appeal, upon the ground that the adjudication was not warranted by the evidence. (R. v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 1 Chit. 649; R. v. The Justices of Devon, Id. 34; R. v. The Justices of —, Id. 164; Willett v. Sparrow, 6 Taunt. 576). Where, in an appeal against an order of removal, the appellants admitted a prima facie case of settlement in their parish, and then proved a subsequently acquired settlement elsewhere; after their case was finished, the attorney for the respondents addressed the justices, and made observations upon the appellants' case; he then proposed to call witnesses to contradict it, but they refused to allow him, as he had rested his case on his argument as to the insufficiency of the appellants' case, upon which the sessions quashed the order of removal; on application to the Court of King's Bench, however, they refused to grant a mandamus to compel the justices to hear and decide the question, stating that there was no instance where the Court had interfered by mandamus to direct justices to rehear an appeal which had been already heard. "In this case," said Bayley, J., "the justices entered into the consideration of this appeal; and after having heard it, they have decided that the respondents ought not to be allowed to call witnesses in reply. It is possible that in that decision they may have been wrong; but it seems to me that we are not at liberty to enter into that question, as no case has been sent up for our consideration. If we were to do so, we should constitute this a court of appeal from the quarter sessions, and we should have applications continually made to us to overturn their determinations, on the ground of the improper reception or rejection of evidence, and be called upon to review their judgment, although no case has been sent to us for that purpose. It is the duty of sessions to hear and decide; and if they entertain any doubts to submit them to this Court; but, where they do not desire our interference we have no jurisdiction. (R. v. The Justices of Carnarvon, 4 B. & Ald. 86; and see R. v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 1 Chit. Rep. 649; R. v. Broseley, 7 Ad. & Ell. 423; S. C. nom. R. v. The Justices of Salop, 7 Law J., M. C., 3; Reg. v. The Justices of West Riding, 9 Law J., M. C., 67; Reg. v. The Justices of West Riding of Yorkshire, 10 Ad. & Ell. 685; Ex parte Broseley, 7 Id. 423; R. v. The Justices of Devonshire, 9 Dow, 509). So, where, on an appeal against an order of removal, the sessions refused to receive certain evidence tendered, and dismissed the appeal upon application to the Court of King's Bench for a mandamus to compel the justices to enter continuances, and hear the appeal, the Court refused to grant the writ, saying that the justices were the judges of the law, and if they had made an error, and would not take the opinion of the Court, however erroneous it might be, still the Court of King's Bench could not interfere. (R. v. Frieston, 5 B. & Ad. 597; R. v. The Justices of Cumberland, 1 M. & S. 190; R. v. Justices of Cambridgeshire, 1 D. & R. 325; R. v. Justices of Farringdon, 4 D. & R. 735; R. v. Justices of Surrey, 5 D. & R. 308). Where by an inclosure act an appeal was given to the next sessions within six months after cause of complaint, the appellant moved the Court of Sessions to receive and respite his appeal to the next sessions, which they refused; the Court would not grant a mandamus to compel the justices to receive the appeal, saying, that, although it was compulsory on the justices to receive the appeal, they were not bound to respite; and, as the application was to enter the appeal in case the sessions would agree to respite, they could not compel the justices to receive it. (R. v. The Justices of Derbyshire, 4 T. R. 488; see R. v. The Justices of Wilts, 2 Bott. 746, pl. 960; R. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 1 M. & S. 327; R. v. The Justices of Leicestershire, 1 M. & S. 444). So, where a notice of appeal against an order of filiation did not state the cause or nature of the appeal as required by statute, and on this ground the sessions refused to hear the appeal, the Court of King's Bench refused a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances, holding that the justices had done right in refusing to hear the appeal. (R. v. Justices of Oxford, 1 B. & C. 279). So, where an application was made at the Easter Sessions to enter and respite an appeal against an order of filiation made on the 14th January, but the justices refused the application because no notice of appeal had been given, or recognizance entered into; notice of appeal was then given for the adjourned sessions, and the appellant entered into the recognizance; nevertheless, the justices still refused to hear the appeal; on application, the Court of King's Bench, however, refused to grant a mandamus, as the stat. 49 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 7, expressly enacts that no appeal shall be brought, received, or heard, unless ten days before the next sessions notice of appeal be given, and, within three days after, a recognizance be entered into; saying the sessions were right in refusing to hear the appeal, for, in default of the appellants complying with the requisites of the statute, the justices had no authority to receive or hear the appeal. (R. v. Justices of Lincolnshire, 3 B. & C. 848). So, where the justices of a county refused to receive an appeal against a poor-rate on the ground that it ought to have been made to the sessions for the borough; the Court of King's Bench refused to grant a mandamus, because it appeared upon argument, that the justices of the borough had jurisdiction. (R. v. Justices of Essex, 5 M. & S. 513). So the Court of Queen's Bench refused a mandamus to justices at the sessions of a county to hear an appeal, it appearing that a separate court of quarter sessions had been granted to the borough under the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the recorder of such court having exclusive jurisdiction of appeal against orders of removal made by the borough justices. (Reg. v. Justices of Suffolk, 2 Q. B. 85). So, where an order of removal from a township in Yorkshire to a parish in Middlesex was executed on the 12th of January, and the next sessions were holden on the 18th, but no appeal was entered until the Easter sessions, when a motion was made to enter and respite, but the justices refused to receive the appeal; the Court of King's Bench refused to grant a mandamus to compel them, saying, that the appellants ought to have come prepared to try the appeal at the Easter sessions; but as they had not done so, they could not relieve them. (Rex v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 4 M. & Sel. 327; and see Rex v. The Justices of the North Riding of Yorkshire, 3 T. R. 167). Where, after an order of removal had been made and executed, and notice of appeal given, the order was abandoned by the removing parish, who obtained a supersedeas under the hands and seals of the removing magistrates, and served it on the officers of the appellant parish; application was made to the next sessions for leave to enter the appeal, which was refused, the Court of Quarter Sessions being of opinion that the order was completely at an end; upon application to the Court of King's Bench, they refused to grant a mandamus. Bayley, J., said, "If the parties removing do not choose to pay the expenses of maintenance incurred previously to the supersedeas, they may then enter the appeal for the purpose of compelling them so to do. If they are willing to do it, the sessions may refuse to enter the appeal. I think it was entirely in the discretion of the sessions to enter the appeal or not; and I do not see any ground why this Court should interfere with their decision. The rule must, therefore, be discharged." (Reg. v. The Justices of Norfolk, 5 B. & Ald. 484; but see Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex, 9 Law J., M. C., 59; and also Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 2 Q. B. 705). So, where an appeal against a conviction, under 16 Geo. 3, c. 30, for deer stealing, was entered at the Michaelmas sessions, and, upon being called on, it was objected that the six days' notice required by the statute had not been given, upon which the justices respited the appeal until the next sessions to consider the question, and, in the meantime, the prosecutor was served with a notice to try the respited appeal at the following sessions, at which the objection was again received, and the appeal dismissed; the Court of King's Bench, being of opinion that the sessions had no authority to receive it, unless a previous notice of appeal was given, and a recognizance entered into, refused to grant a mandamus to the justices to compel them to hear the appeal. Ellenborough, C. J., said, "There are two conditions annexed to this right of appeal. One of them, which is the giving the notice, has not been complied with in this case. Of course, therefore, the appeal has never been duly entered; and if so, it could not be adjourned; for the sessions cannot acquire to themselves a jurisdiction by an act of their own. The power of adjournments is only incidental when the sessions cannot conveniently hear the appeal after it has been duly entered." (R. v. The Justices of Oxfordshire, 1 M. & S. 445). It is to be observed that this case differs from R. v. The Justices of Wilts. (8 B. & C. 380), before referred to, for there the justices had power to enter and respite the appeal, and, having exercised it, were bound to try it.

PROCEEDINGS of the CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

(Abridged from a Report in the "Morning Herald" of January 8th, 1847.)

An Extraordinary General Meeting of the Proprietors and the Assured of this Society was held yesterday, at the office in Great Russell-street, for the purpose of declaring a BONUS out of the Profits which have accrued from the general business of the Society during the five years ending June 30th, 1846. Amongst the Directors present were Dr. Moore, G. G. Babington, Esq., Rev. A. B. Clough, Thomas Davis, Esq., Oliver Hargreave, Esq., and Clement Hus, M. D.

Dr. MOORE having taken the Chair, Mr. FINCKARD, the Secretary, read the Report of the assets and liabilities; the former of which amount to 639,797*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and the latter to 484,555*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*, leaving a surplus of 155,242*l.* 6*s.*

The CHAIRMAN then stated that his colleagues had authorized him to lay before the meeting the following Report:—

"In accordance with the Provisions of the Deed of Constitution, the Directors have called the present Meeting, for the purpose of laying before the Proprietors and the Assured the result of an investigation of the Society's Affairs for the five years ending June 30th, 1846. On that day the Society had been in existence twenty-two years. An investigation of its affairs was made first in 1831, being seven years from the commencement; a second time in 1836; and a third time in 1841. The fourth investigation having been just completed, the Directors have now the gratification of communicating the result to the Meeting. In order to present a clear view of the progress of the Society, the Directors will proceed to exhibit the present amount of its Funds, together with their state at the last Quinquennial Division:—

"I. The Society's Income for the year ending with June, 1846, was 97,900*l.*; that for the year ending with June, 1845, 116,981*l.* Thus, notwithstanding the many deductions which are constantly taking place, on account of Policies terminated by death or discontinued from other causes, there is an increase in the Annual Income of the Society to the extent of 18,400*l.*

"II. The amount of the Property of the Society, accumulated from the excess of the receipts above payments, was, in 1841, 418,911*l.* and in 1846, has reached 639,797*l.* Under the head of Payments are included considerable sums paid for the Purchase of Policies and also to Annuitants, besides the amount which has become due from deaths and every other demand.

"III. After deducting the sum required to meet the liabilities of the Society, there remains a surplus of 155,242*l.*; while, in 1841, the corresponding surplus was only 89,460*l.*

"This sum of 155,242*l.* has now to be dealt with, being the amount of profit realized by the Society. In conformity with the provisions of the Deed, one-half of the Profits is to be divided among the Assured for Life, and one-sixth part among the Proprietors; but, in order to avoid inconvenient fractions, the Directors have resolved to recommend to this Meeting to divide the sum of 154,500*l.* This will appertain to the Assured for Life 77,250*l.*, and to the Proprietors 25,750*l.*, leaving one-third of the said Profit, amounting to 51,500*l.*, to be laid by and to accumulate as a reserved Fund. This division will give to the Proprietors a Bonus of 5*l.* 3*s.* per share, and to the Assured a sum of 114,031*l.*, being the equivalent in reversion to the above amount of 77,500*l.* This sum of 114,031*l.* will be added to the Policies, and be payable at the death of the respective parties, and will form an addition equal, on an average, to more than 36 per cent. on the Premiums received during the last five years. It may be desirable, however, to remind the Assured that they have the option of having any one or more of the Bonuses to which they are entitled applied in reduction of their future payments of Premium. For the further information of the Proprietors, it may be mentioned that, by the Deed of Constitution, the Proprietors' Fund is not to accumulate by the addition of Bonuses beyond 40,000*l.*; all subsequent Bonuses being paid over to the Proprietors. The effect of this provision on the present occasion will be, that of the above sum of 25,750*l.*, 17,000*l.* will have to be added to the Proprietors' Fund, which will then have reached its limit, and the remaining 8,750*l.*, being 1*l.* 15*s.* per share, will be paid to the Proprietors in cash at the end of March next. In estimating the amount of liabilities, it is important to observe that every Policy, together with all other risks, has been valued separately and with great care; that there has been no encroachment upon future profits; but that a mode of valuation has been adopted whereby a larger sum is retained to meet such claims as may arise than is usual with most other Offices. This will appear by the following examples:—

Sums set aside as the value of a Policy for $1,000.	By Office, valuing by the Northampton Three per Cent. Table.			By the Mode adopted by this Office.			Difference in favour of this Office.
Effectuated at the age of 40, after 10 yrs.	153	3	7	158	8	5	5 4 10
Effectuated at the age of 50, after 10 yrs.	197	17	3	215	3	0	17 14 9
Effectuated at the age of 60, after 10 yrs.	282	7	5	326	3	0	43 15 7

"It is clear, then, that the prospects of the Policy Holders at future Divisions are most favourable, partly from the unusually large sum retained to meet claims, as shown above, and partly from the reserve of so considerable an amount as 51,500*l.* out of Profits thus accumulated. These facts, which have operated to a certain extent in the diminution of former Bonuses, will undoubtedly contribute most powerfully to increase the amount of Profits to be appropriated to the Assured at all succeeding Divisions. In confirmation of this view, the Directors need only remind the Assured of the statement made at the Division in January, 1842, that the two preceding Bonuses had averaged 25 per cent. on the Premiums; that the one then divided averaged 36 per cent.; and that the future Bonuses were expected to exceed that amount. The most sanguine expectations entertained at that time have been fully realized by the amount of the present Bonus averaging more than 36 per cent.; and on precisely the same grounds the Directors conceive themselves entitled to assert, with additional confidence, that its further increase from time to time is almost certain. The large and increasing amount of the Society's business, and the proportionate diminution of the expense of management (which is now only 24 per cent. on the income), must also be taken into account in the anticipation of future Profits. The Directors have only to add, that they have instructed the Actuary to exhibit to any Proprietor or Policy Holder, or to any person who may be desirous of enquiring, the details of all the calculations, with a full statement of the assets and liabilities and balance-sheets of the Society."

So far as he (the Chairman) was concerned, any comment was unnecessary, for he believed the Report would speak satisfactorily, both to the Proprietors and the assured (applause). He would, however, just call the attention of the meeting to a very distinguishing feature of the Institution, the economy of its management; which was not only well known to the proprietors, but to the public (applause). The Directors would be happy to answer any questions which might be put to them, or to attend to any suggestions which might be offered for the advantage of the Institution (applause).

Mr. FOWLER, after expressing his satisfaction at the explicitness and contents of the Report, said he would trouble the meeting with one or two observations. The sum of 735,342l., which was announced to be the surplus arising from the profits, consisted, he conceived, partly of the reserve made upon a former occasion. If the Secretary could state how much of the amount referred to was composed of the reserve from the former bonus, the meeting would be able to see more clearly the profit realized within the last five years.

The SECRETARY said the sum laid by at the last division (one-third of the profits) was 29,500l.; and therefore the net profit realised during the last five years was 125,000l. or 136,000l.

Mr. FOWLER wished also to know whether any parties had availed themselves of the opportunity afforded of reducing their premiums?

The SECRETARY said that a considerable number of persons had applied their bonuses in reduction of their future payments of premium.

Mr. NEISON (Actuary to the Medical and Invalid Assurance Society) congratulated the Directors on the very distinguished success which had attended the Company's operations (applause). Perhaps the Secretary could explain whether the principle of having a reserve fund applied to other proprietary companies. It was well known that this was a distinguishing feature of some of the mutual companies, and its advantages were obvious. It might be questioned, probably, whether in the infant state of a company the assured would consult their own interest, by adopting such a principle; but in a Society so greatly advanced as the present, it formed a very strong recommendation to Assurers. If it did not exist, the assured would be deprived of a very large bonus laid out for them in future. There was another point of great importance in the Report, and that was the mode in which the liabilities of the Company had been ascertained. He was not in a position to refer to individual instances, but he knew that serious errors had followed the course of valuation which had been repudiated by this Society. He wished to ascertain from the Secretary whether, in ascertaining the liabilities attaching to the policies, the actual age of the assured had been taken. There was another point in connection with the bonus which was deserving of some explanation. Any holder of a policy might select a reduction of premium instead of a bonus. Now, suppose a person to select the reduction of premium on the present occasion, he wished to know whether he would be able to select a bonus in addition on the next, and vice versa (hear, hear). He believed the last valuation was made up to the 30th June, 1841, and was anxious to ascertain the number of policies in force on that day, and the number at present in existence. He also wished to know the average age of the assured. He would, in conclusion, ask one other question—namely, the number of deaths during the last five years, and whether there had been any material difference between the actual number and the number anticipated? (hear, hear).

The SECRETARY felt great pleasure in answering the questions which had been put by the able and intelligent gentleman who had just addressed the Meeting. With respect to the first question, he was not aware of any other Proprietary Office which had adopted the principle of laying by one-third of the profits. There could be no question that that principle had been a great drawback to the Company, with respect to the bonuses which had heretofore been declared; and it was a matter of astonishment to those who were acquainted with these matters how the Company had got on so well. Notwithstanding this great difficulty, the Society had done its full share of business. All difficulties had now been got over, and the plan of laying by one-third of the surplus would do more to increase the bonuses on future occasions than any other that could have been adopted. To prove that this system must act very beneficially, he might refer to the report of the Equitable Society, in which, after giving examples of its large bonuses, he found this statement:—"Among the causes which have contributed to these important results is the reservation at each annual division of one-third of the surplus fund for future appropriation." It was, therefore, quite evident that the prospects of this Company for the future were pre-eminently above those of all the other companies which had not been obliged to adopt this system, and every person connected with it might look forward with perfect confidence to extremely satisfactory bonuses (cheers). With respect to the mode of valuation, it was stated in the Report, that all the policies had been valued separately; and he would add, that all the lives had been valued at the increased age at which they had arrived on the 30th of June last. In reference to the question as to the reduction of premium, he begged to say that the bonus might be taken either way, and at any time. Another question put by Mr. NEISON was with regard to the number of policies. The number at the last division, five years ago, was 3140; and the number in existence now is 4,136 (hear, hear). The average age of lives on the books is 44. The number of deaths expected within the last year was 166; but he was happy to say the actual number which had occurred was only 58, being just one-half (applause). This was rather more favourable than the general average; but the same sort of mortality had existed during the five years, with little deviation (hear, hear).

In answer to a question by Mr. SHERMAN.

The SECRETARY said, that, in consequence of the enormous competition which had existed between the Life Offices for the last ten or twelve years, several of the more recent ones had endeavoured to show a great bonus. In order to keep themselves alive, they had, on the first occasion, instead of dividing the profits up to that time, anticipated the future profits from the business upon their books. This was an extremely fallacious mode of proceeding, and must in time prove ruinous. It would, no doubt, have the effect of misleading some persons, by giving to the office a highly flourishing appearance, when that was not really the case. This Company had, however, laid by rather too much than too little, and had not encroached on any future profits.

Mr. NEISON had not the least hesitation in saying that the mode of valuation which this Society had rejected would have had the effect of anticipating future bonuses; and he was justified in that opinion by an essay read before the Philosophical Society of Edinburgh, by one of the most scientific writers on the subject. One feature connected with this Society deserving of great commendation was the minuteness of detail with which the valuations were made (hear, hear).

Dr. RABD inquired the average number of proposals for life assurance during the last five years, and the amount of money included in those proposals.

The SECRETARY.—The average Annual number of proposals was 557, and the amount proposed by them was 330,600l.

Mr. WISEMAN said the Report and the explanations which had been given were so satisfactory, that every one interested must feel obliged to the Directors for the manner in which they had conducted their affairs (applause). He wished particularly to impress on the notice of the Proprietors and the public the importance of the last paragraph in the Report, which invited the assured and the public to examine the state of their own affairs. If there was one mode of inspiring confidence better than another, it was that of giving on all occasions every possible information, and shewing no wish for concealment (hear, hear). He believed it would be desirable in future reports to give a general outline of the principles on which the Society's calculations were founded.

The SECRETARY said the original draft of the Report stated the exact mode; but the Directors thought so few persons would properly understand it, that it would be much better for parties to call at the office, where every information would be afforded (hear, hear).

Dr. CRUCEFIX expressed himself highly gratified with what had taken place. If he asked one or two questions he trusted they would not be considered as arising from idle curiosity. The first point on which he wished to ask a question related to the mode of arriving at the peculiar valuation respecting unhealthy lives. He also wished to know whether the Directors had considered another matter, which he had always thought of importance—the propriety of an insurer taking the value of the bonus in cash instead of its full amount being added to the policy, or his receiving it hit by hit in the reduction of premium.

The SECRETARY, in reply to the first question, said, that more than usual care was always taken in admitting diseased lives, and when they were admitted, they were taken at a corresponding premium. With respect to the second question, the Directors had no power at present to act in the manner suggested. Dr. CRUCEFIX did not seem to think the reduction of premium so important as it really is. To shew its effects he would mention one or two instances. In the year 1825, Archbishop Pott insured for 1000l. This being his fourth bonus, would not only have the effect of extinguishing the premium, but of adding the sum of 176l. to the policy (hear, hear).

A PROPRIETOR remarked that this was somewhat extraordinary.

The SECRETARY, in explanation, said that the four bonuses amounted to 406l. By taking an annuity instead, in reduction of his premium, he would obtain a larger amount than would pay the premium.

The Rev. E. J. WILCOCKS.—And for the rest of his life not have a shilling to pay (hear, hear).

The SECRETARY.—Yes; and beyond that there would be the addition to the policy to which he had alluded. He would mention another life, the insurance on which took place in 1827. The age was 61, and the premium 66l.; but by applying the bonus in a similar manner, the premium would now be reduced to 8l. He would just add another instance or two where two bonuses only had been given. A life, aged 59, was insured at a premium of 200l. That premium was now reduced to 55l. 5s. In another case the life was 61. The premium, which was 66l., is now reduced to 41l. And he begged to add, that, as the bonuses hereafter are expected to be larger, so almost most the reductions of premium at all ages be greater (hear, hear).

Dr. SHERMAN moved that the account and statements contained in the Report be approved.

Dr. DUNLAP seconded the motion.

Mr. FOWLER said he was desirous of ascertaining the relative position of this with other offices, and the number of offices started within the last five years.

Mr. NEISON said a great number had been projected, but he believed that fifty had come to maturity.

Mr. FOWLER asked whether other offices had been equally successful? The SECRETARY believed that a majority of the old offices had rather receded than gone forward. Many of the same-standing were not doing near so much business.

Dr. HUX wished to know the number of applications for policies, and the number of refusals.

The SECRETARY said the number of proposals during the last five years was 2784, out of which number 415 were declined.

A PROPRIETOR.—How many were effected?

The SECRETARY.—For the five years ending June, 1841, the number issued was 1837; for the last five years, 1692; being an increase of 53. To shew that the Society was progressing, he might add that the number issued during the last year was 801 (hear, hear).

Persons of every age and in any station may assure with this Society.

Nearly Five-sixths of all the Profits will in future be divided among the Assured.

LONDON, JUNE 5, 1847.

It appears that in the Bristol County Court an action was lately brought by a shoemaker, whose account against his customer very much exceeded 20*l.*, for a portion of the debt under 20*l.*, and that judgment was given for him. And this decision has afforded ground for some doubts and anxiety on the part of the public as to the effect of the 63rd clause of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 90. The clause in question runs thus: "That it shall not be lawful for any plaintiff to divide any cause of action, for the purpose of bringing two or more suits in the said courts; but any plaintiff having cause of action for more than 20*l.*, for which a plaint might be entered under this act, if not for more than 20*l.*, may abandon the excess; and thereupon the plaintiff shall, on proving his case, recover an amount not exceeding 20*l.* And the judgment of the Court upon such plaint shall be in full discharge of all demands in respect of such cause of action, and entry of the judgment shall be made accordingly."

We are not apprised of the details of the Bristol case; but the judge appears to have held, that the plaintiff's whole demand was not one cause of action, but several causes of action; and, therefore, that, by recovering 20*l.* in one action, he was not precluded from bringing a further action for the remainder. The question, however, which this case has suggested is, whether a tradesman, dealing with his customer upon a given credit, say a quarter's credit, can, at the end of the quarter, bring several actions for the items composing the account. And the great difficulty suggested is that of determining what is meant in the statute by cause of action.

Now, the matter appears to us not very difficult, if we look at the common-sense view of it, and we shall find that that view is supported by authority.

If a tradesman, say a shoemaker, makes for me a pair of shoes and delivers them, and delivers and claims payment of his bill for the shoes, there, it is clear, is a distinct cause of action. If he delivers the shoes but makes no claim for payment, there is no cause of action, because, until there is a sufficient claim made and refused or neglected, there is plainly no actual cause of action, though there may be an inchoate right of action. If, therefore, a shoemaker makes me a dozen pair of shoes consecutively, without making any claim for payment, there is no cause of action till he does make a claim; and hence if, before he delivers any bill and claims payment, the amount of his claim exceeds 20*l.*, the cause of action is for more than 20*l.*, and obviously he cannot split his cause of action into several parts, and proceed in the county court by one action for the price of so many pairs of shoes as amount to 20*l.*, and by another action for the balance.

This view is, as we have said, supported by authority. In Rez v. The Sheriff of Hertfordshire, (1 B. & A. 672), (cited by Mr. Udall in his Essay on the County Courts Act, p. 49, notes), the application was for a writ to prohibit the sheriff from proceeding in two suits in his county court, at the suit of the same plaintiff against the same defendant, and it appeared that the facts were these: A. became indebted to B. in a sum not exceeding 40*s.* for the carriage of a parcel of goods; and in a month afterwards incurred another debt to B. not exceeding 40*s.*, for the carriage of a second parcel. B. brought two actions in the county court for the respective debts; and held, "that the causes of action were distinct, and that B. was entitled to sue separately for each demand. Lord Tenterden observed that this was not a splitting of actions. To be so, the cause of action must be one and entire; in these cases, the two items are perfectly distinct debts, the one having no connection with the other. The plaintiff might have sued for one before the other was due, and that as he had a remedy for the first debt, so he must have one for the second." Now, the principle of this decision is, that separate grounds of claim form separate causes of action, provided, we conceive, separate claims are made in respect of them. But if the party having separate grounds of claim, elect to amalgamate them into one, and to make but one claim in respect of all, he treats the aggregate of his atoms of debt as one debt, and himself converts several causes of action into one cause of action.

No one can doubt, that, if a tradesman delivers a quarter's bill as a specific bill, he could bring an action on that bill before the next quarter's bill had become due. It is a perfectly distinct claim, and would be a distinct cause of action, whether there were or were not any subsequent dealing. Suppose him to go on supplying a customer for any given number of quarters without payment, delivering for each quarter a distinct bill, in no degree noticing the preceding one, could it be contended that he could not bring an action on any or either and each of the quarters' bills? But, if he thought fit, instead of taking that course, to run all the accounts one into the other, and at the end to lay one claim for the whole, then could it be any more doubted that he had changed the several claims into one claim, and the several causes of action into one cause of action? The whole question is one of construction of the contract between the parties, that is, of the intention of the parties. When I lend A., for example, from time to time money, taking notes for the separate loans, unquestionably I could proceed on each of the notes separately; but if, after a time, I cancel the separate notes, and take one note for the aggregate debt, as unquestionably I have made the contract one of a single debt instead of many debts, and could no longer proceed for the items separately, but only for the whole as one demand. Before the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, the point was of little importance, but it has now become of importance to consider the effect of varying the original contract between tradesman and customer, and we apprehend that everything, or nearly everything, will depend upon the time and mode of the claim. We cannot doubt that a tradesman supplying goods, for each item of which delivered he might maintain an action in the county court, if he sent in a distinct bill, and made a distinct and separate claim of payment, will be unable to proceed for more than 20*l.* if he delivers no account, and makes no claim till his claim exceeds 20*l.* But if a tradesman takes care to deliver and claim payment of his bill, as a distinct bill on a closed account, whenever it amounts to 20*l.*, we conceive that any county court would miscarry if it should refuse to give judgment in his favour, though he should bring fifty actions, provided he is not barred by the Statute of Limitations. It must not be forgotten, that in all cases, however much the cause of action exceeds 20*l.*, the plaintiff may recover for 20*l.*, if he will submit that the judgment in his favour shall be a bar against any further claim in respect of the whole sum, on the claim for which he grounded his action to recover the 20*l.*

We cannot conclude without noticing the grievous defect of the County Courts Act, that it affords no means of bringing a question before a superior court by way of appeal. Here, for instance, is a sort of case in which no one will be satisfied with county court law, and which, nevertheless, can in no way be brought before a superior court, either by way of appeal, or by way of case for its opinion, if once brought to trial in the county court. The 90th section of the act permits, under certain circumstances, the removal of a case into a superior court, where it has not been tried in the county court; but that power will obviously not at all answer the purpose of an appeal.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

TRINITY TERM.—10 VICTORIA.—June 3.

This Court will, on Monday the 14th, Tuesday the 15th, Wednesday the 23rd, Saturday the 26th, and Wednesday the 30th days of June instant, and on Thursday the 1st, Friday the 2nd, and Saturday the 3rd days of July next, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business in the Crown Paper, the New Trial Paper, and Special Paper; and will also hold a sitting on Wednesday the 7th day of July next, and give judgment in cases previously argued.

By the Court.

Lord Denman, C. J., delivered the judgment of the Court in—

LONDON, JUNE 19, 1847.

THE case, Ex parte Kinning, (ante, 451, 456), is worthy of some consideration, as it relates to the proceeding of the inferior courts which have lately been established throughout the country, and also involves the important principle that no person shall be exposed to loss or punishment without having an opportunity of defending himself.

It is true, that, when judgment has been obtained against a defendant, a writ of execution may issue thereon without further notice to him, because the issuing of such writ is merely a ministerial act of the Court in order to carry out its sentence. So also, by express statutory language, a capias may issue against a defendant upon an ex-parte application of the plaintiff made upon oath; but firstly, such a course is declared legal by the words of the statute; secondly, it is allowed only in cases where the debtor is about to leave the country to avoid payment of the debt; and, thirdly, a speedy remedy is afforded to the party arrested by an application, on sufficient cause to a judge at chambers.

But where the act involving loss or punishment is not so expressly provided for by statute, and where it is not merely a ministerial, but a judicial act, and therefore may be varied according to circumstances operating upon the mind of the judge or party about to commit the act, the person who is to be affected by it should have notice of the proceeding against him, and be permitted to adduce such facts and arguments as may appear to him sufficient to mitigate or wholly prevent the threatened evil.

This principle is consistent with natural justice, and has been fully recognised by the laws of England.

It will be found to have governed more or less the following cases:—Dr. Webb v. Batchelour, (1 Vent.

273); Bagg's case, (11 Co. 99 a.); R. v. Chandler, (1 Ld. Raym. 545); The King v. Benn and Church, (6 T. R. 198); Harper v. Carr, (7 T. R. 275); Re v. Gaskin, (8 T. R. 209); Capel v. Child, (2 C. & J. 558); Painter v. The Liverpool Gas Light Company, (3 Adol. & Ell. 433); Reg. v. Smith, (5 Q. B. Rep. 614); Re Blagg, (M. T., 1845, not reported, but stated in note to ante, 452).

In Harper v. Carr, it was held that the granting of a warrant of distress for a poor's-rate is a judicial act, and that the magistrates ought first to summon the party to hear what he has to say in his defence; and per Lord Kenyon, "In the instance of granting a warrant of distress, the justices exercise a discretion after inquiring into the circumstances of the case. It is an essential rule in the administration of justice, that no man shall be punished without being heard in his defence; the party must be summoned before a warrant of distress is granted, and on that summons many circumstances may appear to shew that a warrant of distress ought not to be granted." And in Re v. Benn, the same learned judge remarked, "It is an invariable maxim in our law that no man shall be punished before he has had an opportunity of being heard."

In Capel v. Child, Bayley, B., said, "I know of no case in which you are to have a judicial proceeding, by which a man is to be deprived of any part of his property without his having an opportunity of being heard."

It is well known, that numerous alterations have been made within the last few years in the laws relating to debtors and creditors. Opinions upon this subject have been in a state of transition, and it is to be hoped they will, ere long, settle down into a measure affording certain justice to both parties. It seems to be more generally admitted than it once was, that it is impolitic and unjust to throw a man because he cannot pay debts which were contracted without fraud or gross imprudence. The stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, provided, that a debtor should not be taken in execution unless the debt amounted to 20*l.* This enactment was afterwards regarded as an injury to creditors, and the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127, "for the better securing the Payment of Small Debts," was passed. By the 1st section of the last-mentioned statute, it was enacted, in substance, that any person indebted to another in a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, on a judgment or order of Court, may be summoned before an inferior Court, and be examined touching the manner and time of contracting the debt, his means or prospect of payment, &c., and the Court may order the debt to be paid by instalments; and, in case the debtor shall not attend, or shall not answer satisfactorily, &c., or "shall appear to have the means of paying the debt by instalments, and shall not pay the same at such times as the Court shall order, the judge of such court may order such debtor to be committed for any time not exceeding forty days." And, by sect. 3, such imprisonment is not to operate as a satisfaction of the debt.

The question in Kinning's case arose upon the above 1st section. He had been committed by a judge of the Sheriff's Court for non-payment of a first instalment of 2*l.*, having been ordered, after appearance and examination, under the above act, to pay a debt of 19*l.* 19*s.* by monthly instalments of 2*l.* each. The order or warrant of commitment did not state that the debtor had been summoned, or had notice, after the making of such order for payment, and before the making of the warrant for his commitment. It was on this ground (and upon another, which it is not necessary here to consider) that a motion was made for his discharge. The Court of Queen's Bench, to which the application was first made, was divided in opinion, Lord Denman, C. J., and Erle, J., agreeing with a former opinion expressed by Alderson, B., in Ex parte Foulkes, (15 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 300), that such a warrant was in the nature of a limited capias ad satisfaciendum, which must be considered as in full operation from the time of making the order for the payment of the debt by instalments, and they were also of opinion, that the issuing of such warrant was a ministerial act, and that there would be danger of the debtor's absconding, if it were necessary in such a case to summon him.

The Court of Common Pleas was next moved for the prisoner's discharge, and they were unanimous in granting it, in conformity with the opinions of Patteson and Coleridge, JJ., in the Court of Queen's Bench. Their decision proceeded upon the grounds, that the making of the order or warrant for commitment was a judicial act, in the exercise of which the judge had a discretionary power, inasmuch as the power of imprisonment was intended to be given by the act only where a debt was improperly withheld, and the term of imprisonment was to be regulated by the circumstances of the case; that it was necessary for the judge to make inquiry before he could decide upon committing, or upon the period of commitment; and that, according to general principles, this could be properly done only by summoning the debtor, and hearing what he had to say in his defence.

As the statute was silent upon the question, the learned judges applied the principle, of which we have treated at the commencement of this article.

OBSERVATIONS ON REG. v. INHABITANTS OF ST. GILES-IN-THE-FIELDS,

(Queen's Bench, 14th and 15th June, 1847).

It has struck us as singular, that, in the case of Reg. v. The Inhabitants of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, recently in part heard, before the Court of Queen's Bench, in which the much-debated question of the legality of the marriage of a man with his deceased wife's sister is raised, the distinction between marrying a deceased wife's legitimate sister and her illegitimate sister, should have been so little noticed, and that the case of Hains v. Jeffel, (Ld. Raym. 68), and the comments of Sir W. Scott upon it in Horner v. Horner, (1 Hag. Cons. 337), should have been quite passed by*.

The senior counsel contending for the legality of the marriage, is reported to have said, that the fact that the first wife was an illegitimate offspring, could make no difference; to which the Court responded, that, if it made any, it would be in favour of the marriage. To us that circumstance appears to make so considerable a difference, that we shall not be surprised to see the Court escape from the difficult task of deciding the principal question, by deciding the case upon that very distinction.

The question is, we believe, wholly unprejudiced by decision. That is, as we have shewn in the paper referred to in the 9th volume of THE JURIST, the case of Hains v. Jeffel did not decide it, nor was it decided, nor does it appear that any opinion was given upon it, in the proceedings in the ecclesiastical court, which, in Hains v. Jeffel, it was sought to prohibit; and except in the two cases referred to, we have found nothing in the books on the subject†.

It remains, therefore, to be considered upon principle, whether marrying successively the legitimate and the illegitimate daughters of the same parents, is, for the purpose of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, and all the law which that statute brings into play, marrying two sisters.

It is perfectly clear, that, for many purposes, there is no legal consanguinity between the legitimate and illegitimate daughters of the same parents. The illegitimate daughter could not, for instance, inherit as coparsoner with the legitimate daughter. A devise or bequest by the legitimate daughter to "my brothers and sisters," would clearly pass nothing to the illegitimate daughter. So, under the old law, a bastard could not be a villein unless he acknowledged himself to be a villein in a Court of record; "for," says Littleton, (s. 188), "he is, in law, quasi nullius filius, because he cannot be heir to any." For the same reasons, a bastard (before the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76) had his settlement in the parish of his birth; nor can a use be raised in favour of a bastard for the consideration of blood, for the same reason, because he has not in him in law the blood of his parent; "because," says Lord Coke, "in judgment of law he is nullius filius." (Co. Lit.

* See a paper on this subject, 9 Jur. 469.

† It is singular that both in the original text of Blackstone, 21st edit., vol. 1, p. 468, and in the note in the same volume, p. 459, Lord Raymond, p. 68, (viz. the case of Hains v. Jeffel) is referred to, in support of the assertion, that an illegitimate child may not marry a relation within the levitical degrees. It is probable that Sir W. Blackstone relied upon some previous text-writer, and that the author of the note relied upon Sir W. Blackstone, as it is quite certain that the point received no direct decision in Hains v. Jeffel.

123. a.). These disabilities of a bastard, it must be observed, are not the consequence of specific rules that a bastard child shall not inherit, or shall not be a villain, &c., but are the consequence of a much broader and more general assumption of the law, which, whether morally or physically absurd or not, is acted upon as a reality, viz. that the blood of a person born out of wedlock is not, in point of law, traceable to his reputed parents. He has no inherited blood; in the eye of the law, he is of no one's blood. Hence, he can have neither brothers nor sisters, nor any other kindred by blood.

If this doctrine, however artificial, is supported, as it clearly is, for all purposes of inheritance, and even for all purposes of purchase, where the description of the person taking by purchase is exclusively confined to terms describing him as of the blood of his ancestor, strange confusion would be occasioned if it were not to be supplied under all circumstances where the legal rights of the parties depend on making the bastard of the blood of his ancestor. It would seem, for example, very absurd to state as propositions of law,—

I. A. shall not inherit from B., his alleged sister, because he is not of her blood.

II. He shall not marry her, because he is of her blood*.

And yet so the propositions must inevitably stand if it be decided that the legitimacy or illegitimacy of one of the two wives in such a case as that now before the Court of Queen's Bench, is immaterial. An argument against applying the doctrine of nullius filius to the case of a marriage with a deceased wife's illegitimate sister would of course be, as it was in Hains v. Jeffel, that, according to this rule, a man might "marry his own bastard, which, doubtless, could not be allowed." There are many answers to this argument: firstly, it may be observed, that to say that "doubtless a man would not be allowed to marry his own bastard," is merely begging the question, and assuming as settled that which is the very subject of dispute, viz. whether the law knows any such relation as parent and illegitimate child; that is, whether it can take cognizance of the existence of a bastard with reference to the blood of his ancestor, or in any other mode than with reference to his isolated identity? secondly, the argument goes, at most, to shew, that, from an admitted rule of law, consequences may flow which, if the law had foreseen them, it would have forbidden; but it does not prove that such consequences are forbidden: thirdly, it may be answered, that such an argument may be a very good reason for the interference of the Legislature, either to alter the original rule, or to except expressly certain things from its operation, but is no reason for denying effect to the corollaries deducible according to the strictest reasoning from the rule itself: fourthly, it may be answered, that the rule is in fact a rule of evi-

* It will, perhaps, be objected to this mode of treating the question, that the word "blood" means always, with reference to questions of inheritance, legitimate blood; but that, with reference to marriage, it does not necessarily mean legitimate blood; and, therefore, it may be true that a man is not of his sister's blood for the purpose of inheritance, but is so for the purpose of incapacity to marry. The answer to this objection is, that there is no such distinction in law; that proximity of blood necessarily implies community of descent; that the law knows no descent except through marriage; that the very terms "brother," "sister," nay even "child," have strictly no legal application except to persons claiming them by legitimate consanguinity; and that in the strongest case that can be put, that of a gift to a bastard child, described as the child of A., such child would take not as child, but by description, with reference to its reputation of being the child. "It is not the fact," says Mr. Jarman, "for that the law will not inquire into, but the reputation of the fact that entitles them." (Jarm. Will., vol. 2, p. 129).

dence, according to which, where it appears that A. and B. were never married, the law will not notice the fact of their cohabitation, or of issue having been born of them, and can receive no evidence to shew that a person alleged to be their issue is anything more than a total stranger in blood.

Again, it may be urged, that to contend for carrying out the doctrine, that a bastard is nullius filius, to the extent of saying that it is not unlawful for a man to marry his own bastard, would be to deduce from the law a sanction to the grossest immorality. But the answer here is again, that the immorality is the consequence of the consanguinity, and, if there be no consanguinity, there can be no immorality; and the question is, not whether society, judging according to its physical knowledge and its moral maxims, would be justified in holding such a marriage immoral, a point on which there cannot be much doubt, but whether the law, which does not notice or admit the consanguinity, can take cognizance of an immorality which has no possibility of existence, except as grounded on an admitted consanguinity. The argument may be put in another form—thus, at least as regards consanguinity through paternal blood: not that the law holds a bastard to be strictly of the blood of no man, which would be absurd, but that it refuses (upon a notion, it is said, of discouraging immorality) to inquire or be informed of whose blood he is; consequently, it cannot notice whether he is collaterally of the blood of any legitimate descendant of a particular person; so that, when it is admitted that one has married a woman bastard, the question, whether she was the sister of his deceased wife, cannot be entertained, because the rule of law prevents the Court from receiving any judicial information on which it can ascertain of whose blood the woman bastard was. It cannot, therefore, judicially know that she was the sister of her husband's deceased wife, and cannot, consequently, on that ground, pronounce the second marriage unlawful.

NEW CHANCERY ORDERS.

Just published, in 1 vol., price 12s. 6d.,

THE PRACTICE OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY under the ORDERS of MAY, 1845. Edited by JOHN ROGERSON, a Solicitor of the Court.

"Altogether we can recommend the book as supplying a want much felt at this time by every Practitioner in the Court of Chancery. To Articled Clerks preparing for Examination it will be of great service, as an easy and explanatory elucidation of Orders which have puzzled old and experienced Practitioners."—Law Times, May 22, 1847.

"This is an exceedingly useful, and we doubt not will prove a very popular, work. The book is, indeed, a most valuable adjunct to Smith's or Daniel's Practice."—The Standard, May 23, 1847.

Law Libraries and small Parcels of Law Books purchased or exchanged on Liberal Terms. A Discount allowed on Cash Transactions.

The Reports, Law Magazines, and all the Legal Periodicals supplied on the Day of Publication. Books elegantly, usefully, and tastefully bound.

Law Students will find that a Stock of Works suited to their wants is always on hand.

The following LAW BOOKS have just been Published by SPETTIGUE & FARRANCE:—

THE COMMENTARIES OF SIR WILLIAM BLACKSTONE. By JAMES STEWART, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister at Law. Price 3*l.* 3*s.*, in cloth.

JUDGMENTS and CROWN DEBTS, as they affect Real Property. By FREDERICK PRIDEAUX, Esq., Barrister at Law. Third Edition, considerably enlarged. Price 7*s.*

"Mr. Prideaux has collected the learning upon Judgments, with admirable precision and clearness, and we can safely pronounce his work one of very considerable merit and utility."—Jurist.

In 1 vol., royal 13mo., price 1*4s.* boards,
A COLLECTION OF THE REAL PROPERTY STATUTES passed in the Reigns of William IV and Victoria. With explanatory notes, containing short statements of the decided points, and a full reference to all the Cases upon each enactment down to the period of publication. Index, &c. By WILLIAM F. BROWELL, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

THE LAWYER'S COMMON-PLACE BOOK, arranged upon a New Plan; with an Alphabetical Index of upwards of Seven Hundred Heads, which occur in Professional Reading and Practice. Price 10*s.* 6*d.*; or, the large size, 15*s.*

"As I read I formed a Common-place Book, which has been of great use to me even to the present day. It is, indeed, the only way in which law reports can be read with much advantage."—Sir Samuel Romilly.

"We have no doubt the student who diligently reads it will have reason to rejoice in his labour."—Legal Observer.

A LAW LEXICON; or, DICTIONARY OF JURISPRUDENCE; explaining all the Technical Words and Phrases employed in the several Departments of English Law; including, also, the various Legal Terms used in Commercial Transactions; together with an Explanatory as well as Literal Translation of the Latin Maxims contained in the Writings of the Ancient and Modern Commentators. By J. J. S. WHARTON, Esq., S. C. L., of St. Mary Hall, Oxon, &c.

The Publishers, in submitting this Work to the Profession, take leave to remark, that it is not a compilation from previous Law Works, (as a comparison will prove), but a Work that the Author has entirely written, after research into the best authorities, and study of classical and ancient literature. The subjects (many of which are elaborate) have been treated according to the latest alterations; and, besides the constructed and illustrated Latin Maxims, there will be found numerous articles and phrases never before introduced into a Law Dictionary.

"It is a Work that has long been wanted, for the existing Law Dictionaries have, in consequence of the numerous recent alterations in the law, become almost obsolete. Mr. Wharton gives, in this Law Lexicon, an Explanation of all the Technical Words and Phrases employed in the several departments of English Law, including the various legal terms used in commercial transactions; together with an explanatory as well as literal translation of the Latin maxims contained in the writings of the ancient and modern Commentators."—Sun.

NICHOLLS'S PRACTICE IN INSOLVENCY IN THE COURTS OF BANKRUPTCY.—Second Edition. By JAMES NICHOLLS and EDWARD DOYLE, Attorneys at Law. To which is added, the Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 137, for the better securing the Payment of Small Debts; and the Act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, for establishing County Courts. Price 10*s.*

INDEX LEGUM for 1847; or, INDEX OF LEGAL SUBJECTS: to aid the Student and practical Lawyer in easily registering and readily referring to his professional reading and practice. Price 20*s.* in calf; with patent lock, 25*s.*

"There has been long wanting, both for the student and the practitioner, an Index, in which they may set down alphabetically short references to the more important parts of the works they study—the result of their reading and their research, and such notes, queries, and hints as they may wish to preserve for further investigation. The present work supplies this want. The plan is good, and well adapted to the purpose. The Introduction is well written, and clearly explains the proper method of concisely making the entries; and the examples given shew the utility."—Legal Observer.

COMMENTARIES ON EQUITY JURISPRUDENCE. By the late Mr. JUSTICE STORY, Dane Professor of Law in the Harvard University. Second Edition. In 2 vols., royal 8vo. Price 1*1*l. 14*s.* boards.

LONDON, JUNE 26, 1847.

Those who, on any subject, throw out ideas somewhat earlier than others are ready to adopt them, prepare for themselves for the future both pleasure and pain: pleasure, in seeing (if they live long enough) the adoption and realisation of those plans that they themselves believed to be sound and important, and announced as such, when others either wholly overlooked them, or treated them as foolishness: pain, in seeing (as, at least, most generally happens) that, though the ideas are adopted, the original propounders of them are forgotten, and that the credit which they ought to have is taken, sometimes unfairly, but mostly in all honesty, by others. The pleasure or the pain will predominate, in general, according to the relative degrees in which the inventor, if we may so call him, possesses the two qualities of love of his ideas for themselves, or desire of reputation as the author of them. The higher order of spirits will rejoice more at seeing their ideas become dominant, than they will grieve at being personally unknown as the originators of them. Nay, they will sometimes scarcely take the trouble to vindicate their claim to be the originators, and content themselves with seeing their ideas penetrating and pervading the mass, and with quietly enjoying their secret laugh at the self-complacency of those who, having with difficulty imbibed their ideas, they know not how or whence, reissue them as novelties that they themselves have discovered.

We have been led into these reflections by what has taken place, in reference to the humble efforts of this Journal to advance jurisprudential improvements, particularly in regard to the administration of what may be termed the judicial business of Parliament. Were the question merely the personal reputation of the conductors of this Journal, we, as one of them, should aim at classing ourselves with those to whom the expression of their ideas for the improvement of the subjects on which they possess knowledge is, as it were, the mere satisfaction of a mental want; and, provided we had the gratification of seeing ideas that we knew to be ours, and believed to be important, extend, and take effect, we should not trouble ourselves to assert our paternity in regard to them; but, on behalf of this Journal, we feel very differently. To take the lead in suggestions of improvement was early considered one of the principal titles to usefulness of THE JURIST, and has always accordingly been one of its great aims; and believing that its usefulness is much influenced by its having the reputation of taking such a lead, we cannot consent to let others bring out, at the eleventh hour, as of their own invention, plans of jurisprudential reform suggested in THE JURIST long ago, and repeatedly discussed in its pages, and possibly owing to their being so suggested and discussed, the accident of being first brought before the public notice.

The subject to which we are now specially alluding is that of the reform of parliamentary proceedings, in adjudicating upon railway and other private bills for carrying into effect works requiring parliamentary powers. Not long ago, in a discussion in Parliament upon contemplated improvements in the mode of trying applications for railway acts, several members threw out suggestions that nothing satisfactory would be done until the committees were altogether abolished, and some standing body of judicial character appointed in their place; and these suggestions were thrown out as if, both from their novelty and their audacity, the members uttering them, were half afraid of what they had said.

Again, in a very recent number of a quarterly journal devoted to law*, occurs the following passage, in which the idea is put forth as if the writer thought it a new one. "It deserves," he says, "the most careful consideration whether the only remedy—the only measure bearing the semblance of a remedy for the enormous evil complained of—is not the creating a communion of impartial men—not adherents of a minister or of a party—not men sitting in Parliament, and subject to all the influence of party, of intrigue, of canvass—not removable at the nod of a government—but men separated like the judges of the land, from all professional, and placed above all political, influences, and who, like the judges, are both pure in fact, and unsuspected in public opinion—who will, therefore, command the respect both of Parliament and of the country. Let this judicial body examine each contested case, not of railway only, but of all private bills; and having examined and tried the questions raised on it between the parties, let it report to Parliament. Parliament will pay such respect to its decisions and appeals, and re-examination will be extremely rare; and thus, without at all abandoning its privileges, or losing its control, each House will be able to perform its legislative functions with public benefit, and to the public contentment." And thus, the idea of substituting for the present system of committees, a bona fide court, with judicial capabilities and judicial responsibilities, seems fairly launched.

In the soundness of these suggestions we most fully concur. But we take leave to remind our readers that they were advocated in the pages of THE JURIST so far back as February, 1845, and have been since then from time to time insisted upon; and we recall their particular attention to papers in the 9th volume of THE JURIST, pp. 293 and 457, in the latter of which the subject was discussed with some minuteness, and the outline of a court, to act by way of a Judicial Committee to advise Parliament on the subject of applications for parliamentary powers, was sketched out.

To what extent our suggestions on the subject may have led to its consideration and discussion, and to the adoption by more influential persons than ourselves, of ideas similar to ours, we know not, nor is it very material. Suffice it to say, that long ago THE JURIST foresaw the necessity which has been since gradually more and more impressing itself upon the public and parliamentary mind; and that so far as the improvements proposed have as yet taken any specific shape, such shape has been that which has been pointed out as advisable in the pages of this Journal.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE 39TH OF THE GENERAL ORDERS IN CHANCERY OF 1841.

Most of the points that suggest themselves upon the construction of the 39th Order of 1841 have become settled by decision. But there is one which occasionally occurs, and which has not yet been fairly brought before the Court. We allude to the case where the plaintiff, omitting more than one party alleged by the defendant to be necessary, is ready to yield to the objection as to some of the parties, and not as to others. Suppose, for instance, the defendant objects, by his answer, that A. and B. ought to be parties, and the plaintiff, agreeing that A. is a necessary party, and being prepared to amend the bill by making him a party, is also prepared to take the opinion of the Court whether B. is a necessary party. The question is, in what form is the plaintiff to set down the cause. The 39th Order says, that, "where the defendant shall, by his answer, suggest that the bill is defective for want of parties, the plaintiff shall be at liberty, within fourteen days after answer filed, to set down the cause upon that objection only; and the purpose for which the same is so set down shall be notified by an entry to be made in the Registrar's Book in the form, or to the effect, following; that is to say, 'Set down upon the defendant's objection for want of parties.'"

Is, then, the plaintiff to set down the cause upon the objection that B. is not a party; or is he bound to set it down upon the objection generally, and to give up one part of the objection at the hearing? It is obvious that he may pursue this latter course; but the result must necessarily be, that he will be beaten upon part of the objection, and he may thereby be exposed to be ordered to pay the costs of hearing the cause upon the objection; because, although it may be argued, that the defendant, not sustaining his objection as a whole, must be held to have failed, it may be urged on the other side that the plaintiff, succumbing to part of it, has not succeeded in shewing that the defendant's objection is ill founded. At any rate the plaintiff setting down the cause in this manner cannot, by any possibility, be in a position to ask for costs against the defendant.

To the other mode of setting down the cause, viz. upon the objection that B. is a necessary party, it is objected, that the Court has no jurisdiction to hear the cause so set down; that the Court has jurisdiction under the 39th Order to hear the cause upon the defendant's objection, and not otherwise; that the defendant's objection is not that B. merely is a necessary party, but that A. and B. are necessary parties; and, therefore, to split his objection into two objections, and set the cause down upon one of them, is to make an objection for the defendant, and not to hear the cause upon his objection. There is something in this construction of the Order which is very pleasing to the legal mind, from its air of extreme technical accuracy: nevertheless we imagine, that, if it should come before the Court and be argued, it will not be supported.

The object of the Order, to be collected from the latter part of it, is to enable the parties to a cause, to take care at an early stage of it that all the persons necessary as parties upon the allegations of the bill and answer (assuming those allegations to be true) shall be brought at once before the Court, so that neither party may be put to the expense and inconvenience resulting from going into evidence and bringing a cause to a hearing in an incomplete state, and then having it stand over as a matter of course, to be made complete if it can. If, when the defendant has taken the objection by his answer, the plaintiff submits to the entire objection and amends his bill, the setting down of the cause under the 39th Order is of course rendered wholly unnecessary, and the plaintiff is of course put to no other costs than those of amending the bill. If, where the defendant objects to the absence of several parties, the plaintiff could (as may in some cases be possible) amend his bill as to some, and still set down the cause within the time prescribed by the 39th Order, he would in fact remove part of the defendant's objection; and if, having done so, he sets down the cause upon the objection that the remainder of the persons suggested by the defendant are necessary parties, why should it be said that that is not the defendant's objection? True, it is not the whole of the defendant's original objection, but so much of the defendant's objection as the plaintiff has cured is necessarily gone, and what remains is, we submit, the defendant's objection. The defendant is in no manner damaged by the effect of this construction of the Order; because the hearing, if necessary, remains so, not by reason of anything the plaintiff has done, but by reason of the defendant's taking the objection. Then, if it would be correct to set down a cause upon the defendant's objection that B. is a necessary party, where the plaintiff has actually reduced his objection to that, by amending as to A., why should it not be held that the cause is well set down within the Order, upon the objection that B. is a necessary party, where the plaintiff, although precluded by want of time from actually amending, virtually reduces the defendant's objection to an objection that B. is a necessary party, by yielding to the remainder of the original objection, and taking upon himself the liability to amend?

But, taking another view of the question, and looking at the literal meaning of the Order,—when it speaks of the defendant's objection for want of parties, does it not treat the objection as a thing of itself, irrespective of the question, whether it applies to one or to many parties? Whether the defendant requires one or two or more additional parties to the suit, his objection is still simply, that the suit is defective. The reason of the objection is, that all the parties that ought to be present are not present; but the objection remains so long as any part of the reason remains; and whether the plaintiff denies the validity of the objection as to every party suggested, or as to some only, still he is denying the validity of the objection. In this view, therefore, it would be strictly accurate to set a cause down upon the defendant's objection, that A. or B. is a necessary party, omitting all notice of the other of them. The point occurred in a case of Bradstock v. Whatley, (6 Beav. 451), but was not noticed in argument. In that case the defendants objected, that the suit was defective for want of parties, and, amongst other persons, they insisted, that the personal representative of A. was a necessary party. The plaintiff set the cause down upon the objection, that the personal representative of A. was a necessary party; and he submitted to the other objections. That there was a peculiarity in the mode of setting down the cause clearly did not escape notice, because we find the Court framing the order specially. "As to the form of the order," said the Master of the Rolls, "I think there ought to be some constat of what has been decided by the Court. The proper form of order would seem to be this: The defendants having, by their answer, objected, that certain persons (naming them) are necessary parties to this suit, the plaintiff caused the objection to be set down, and demanded the opinion of the Court, whether the personal representative of A. was a necessary party to the suit, wherefore &c., the Court held, that, as the record was now framed, such personal representative was not a necessary party." And the costs were reserved.

No objection, however, seems to have been taken that the cause was improperly set down; and certainly the point was not argued, so that the case of Bradstock v. Whatley cannot be considered as an express decision.

If the 39th Order of 1841 is not to be construed in the way for which we have contended, consequences would follow, which seem greatly at variance with the spirit of that Order. In most cases, where a bill is defective for want of parties, it is so from the absence of personal representatives of deceased persons, or from the absence of persons as parties, whom it is difficult to bring regularly before the Court, so that it becomes quite impracticable to amend the bill within the fourteen days prescribed by the 39th Order of 1841. Then what is the plaintiff to do? Is he to be compelled to set down the cause on the defendant's objection, as it stands, without attempting to amend, and, therefore, without the possibility of being wholly successful? Or is he to amend, and let the fourteen days pass by, and leave it to the defendant to renew or not to renew, as he may think fit, his objection as to the party still omitted? As to the first course, undoubtedly, as we have already stated, he may pursue it, but it can scarcely be thought the intention of the Order to make it compulsory on a plaintiff to take a course in which he can by no possibility be completely successful. As to the second course, as it has been decided that the Court has no power after the fourteen days to give leave to set the cause down under the 39th Order, (Calvert v. Gandy, 9 Jur. 122), the difficulty arises, that, unless the defendant renews his objection, the plaintiff cannot set the cause down to be heard; and then the effect would seem to be, that the plaintiff must be in the same position at the hearing as if he had wilfully neglected to set the cause down upon the defendant's objection. So that if our construction of the Order is not the right one, its effect is, in a considerable class of cases, to make it compulsory on a plaintiff either to take a course of proceeding which unavoidably entails partial failure, or to take another which deprives him of the opportunity of acting under the Order, and, at the same time, leaves him to incur the penalties imposed for neglecting to act under it.

That construction, which would lead to such consequences, cannot, we conceive, be the true construction of the Order, unless the words used are incapable of any other. We submit that they are capable of the more liberal construction; and that such will be the construction put upon them by the Court should the point come before it for argument.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

In the event of parish officers omitting or refusing to do any act which, by law, they ought, the Court of Queen's Bench will interfere in a summary way by writ of mandamus in order to compel them, as we have already seen they will in the case of justices of the peace, provided the party applying has no other remedy; therefore a mandamus will be granted to compel the old overseers to deliver their public books and papers to their successors, the Court saying, that, as they were public books, they ought to be delivered over by one overseer to the other, that all the parishioners may have access to them; and for this purpose the churchwardens and overseers for the time being were the proper parties to have the custody of them. (Row v. Blatshew, 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 315; Row v. Olapham, 1 Wils. 305). So, where an assistant overseer, after the expiration of his office, having refused to deliver up the parochial books to the existing overseers, they applied to two justices under the statute, but the justices refused to interfere, the Court, however, granted a mandamus to compel the assistant overseer to deliver up the books. (Reg. v. Fox, 1 W., W., & H. 4). And where, by a statute regulating the affairs of the poor of a certain place, the guardians and overseers were directed to adjust their accounts at quarterly meetings of their own body, and an appeal was given to the sessions in respect of all matters done by virtue thereof; but the statute was silent as to any submission of the overseers' and guardians' accounts to the majority, as required by the 50 Geo. 3, c. 50; the Court granted a mandamus to the guardians and overseers to pass their accounts in the manner required by that statute. (Reg. v. The Justices of Warwickshire, 2 D. & R. 299; S. C., 1 Cas. Mag. 256). And, where commissioners were entrusted by act of Parliament with the regulation of the expenditure of a parish, the Court granted a mandamus to compel them to levy a rate for the purpose of paying off a sum borrowed on the rates by the former commissioners, without pledging their personal security, although the liabilities created under the former act were reserved by the new act, the latter directing that the commissioners should be sued in the name of their clerk. (Res v. The Commissioners of St. Paul's, Chadwell, 1 M. & R. 591; Res v. Carpenter, 6 Adol. & Ell. 794). Where a local act required a select vestry from time to time to make rates for the relief of the poor, and also for the support and repair of the churches, and rate-payers were empowered to appeal to the vestry, and also to the quarter sessions: it was also provided, that nothing in the act contained should avoid any ecclesiastical law, or in any manner interfere with persons having ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the parish: the Court held, first, that, notwithstanding this saving of ecclesiastical rights, the Court had jurisdiction to issue a mandamus to compel the vestry to make such a rate for the repair of the churches; secondly, that a general refusal to do either of two things, one of which the vestry was required to do by act of Parliament, was sufficient to entitle the churchwardens to the mandamus; thirdly, that a colourable adjournment of the question, under the pretence of waiting until the churchwardens had furnished estimates of the sum of money which would be required for the repair of the churches, was equivalent to a positive refusal to make a rate: they, therefore, directed a mandamus to issue. (Reg. v. St. Margaret's, Leicester, 1 Per. & D. 116; S. C., 8 Adol. & Ell. 889; 2 Will. 4, c. 10). So, a mandamus lies to the inhabitants of a parish liable to contribute to the church-rate to meet and assemble together with the minister to elect churchwardens. (Res v. The Inhabitants of Ris, 2 B. & Ad. 197; Stutter v. Freeston, 1 Stra. 52, overruling Anon. case, 2 Stra. 686). And where there were two united parishes, the Court granted a mandamus to the churchwardens and overseers to assemble a meeting pursuant to sect. 24 of the 10 Ann. c. 11, for the purpose of agreeing upon, and ascertaining, the monies and rates to be assessed for the repair of the church of one of those parishes, although a mandamus does not lie to churchwardens to make a church-rate. (Res v. St. Margaret's and St. John's, 4 M. & S. 250). So, a mandamus lies to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor to make rates for the relief of the poor. (Liddleston v. The Mayor of Exeter, Foley, 18; S. C., 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 80; 9 Will. 3; see also Res v. Barnstaple, 1 Barn. 137; S. C., 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 85; 1 Nol., P. L., 62; Res v. Fleshford, Andr. 24; Res v. The Guardians of the Poor of Canterbury, 4 Burr. 2293). And in this case the writ will be granted without a rule to shew cause, for otherwise the poor might starve. (Res v. Fisher, Say. 160; Res v. The Justices of Dorchester, 1 Stra. 393; Res v. Folly, 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 86; Res v. Edwards, 1 B. Rep. 637). The churchwardens and overseers are the proper parties to make a rate: (43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1): in a township or hamlet, the overseers. (13 & 14 Car. 2, & 12, s. 21). So, a mandamus lies to churchwardens to restore a sexton or parish clerk. (Res v. The Churchwardens of Kingsclere, 2 Levz. 18; S. C., 1 Ventr. 143, 153; Res v. Stoke Damerel, 1 N. & P. 56). Or to swear a parish clerk. (R. Mar. 101; Coin. Dig., "Mandamus," (A)). So, a mandamus lies to swear in the churchwardens. (Anon., 2 Chit. 254; Reg. v. Guise, 2 Raym. 1008; S. C., 3 Salk. 88; 6 Mod. 89; 2 Stra. 1045; Res v. White, 2 Raym. 1379; Anon., 1 Ventr. 115; Ib. 267). So, a mandamus lies to the poor-law guardians. (The Poor-law Commissioners v. The Guardians of the Ecdarray Union, 8 Irish Law Rep. 29). And where the ex-overseers of the poor delivered to their successors a certified balance-sheet of the gross sums received and disbursed during the year in which they were in office, without any other voucher or document, it being considered that the delivery of such balance-sheet was not a sufficient compliance with the stat. 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, the Court granted a mandamus to the justices to hear and determine a complaint against the ex-overseers for not having properly accounted for the money received and paid by them pursuant to the provisions of the statute. (Res v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 3 D. & R. 299). It has been held, that, where a party applies for a mandamus to compel churchwardens to allow him to inspect their accounts according to the directions of the 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, he must state some special reason for which he wishes to see the accounts; but it is no answer to the application that the statute imposes a penalty upon the churchwardens improperly refusing the inspection, the Court saying, that, as the writ of mandamus was only granted to prevent failure of justice, and not as a private remedy, and the applicant not having stated the grounds upon which he desired to inspect the books, had not brought himself within the rule for granting a mandamus, his right as a parishioner being a mere private right, for which the Court would not grant it. (Per Holroyd, J., in Res v. Clear, 4 B. & C. 899; S. C., 7 D. & R. 393; see Res v. Smallpiece, 2 Chit. 288). Where the poor-law commissioners, under the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 36, had ordered the guardians of a union to assess the sum of 400l. (an additional sum incurred in completing the workhouse) on the poor-rates, which the guardians had refused, the Court granted a mandamus to compel them, although the Court had no power to inquire into the soundness of the discretion exercised by the commissioners in such a case. (Poor-law Commissioners v. The Guardians of the Clowes Union, 8 Irish Law Rep. 26). A mandamus lies to justices to compel them to appoint overseers, although the time nominated in the statute has expired. (Res v. The Inhabitants of Rufford, 1 Stra. 512; Res v. Sparrow, 2 Stra. 1123; S. C., 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 34; Res v. The Inhabitants of Welbeck, M., 14 Geo. 2, B. R., cited by Wilmot, J., in Res v. Showler, 3 Burr. 1393; Res v. The Justices of Westmoreland, 1 Wils. 138; Res v. Sir Watts Horton, 1 T. R. 374; Res v. Brooding, Cald. 92; Res v. Watson, 7 East, 214; Res v. The Justices of Bedfordshire, Cald. 157; Res v. The Justices of Peterborough, Id. 288). So, to swear overseers of the poor to their accounts, the Court saying, that they could not refuse to grant the mandamus, as it was a motion of course: (Res v. The Justices of Middlesex, (1 Wils. 125; S. C., 1 Bott, P. L., pl. 317): to sign a poor-rate, (Res v. Bercher, 8 Mod. 335; Res v. The Dean and Chapter of Norwich, Carth. 450; Res v. Anon., Comb. 479; Res v. Edwards, ubi sup.): to allow a rate, (Res v. The Justices of Dorchester, 1 Stra. 399; see 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 1; Res v. Lord Godolphin, 13 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 57): to make a warrant of distress for a poor's-rate, (St. Luke's v. The Justices of Middlesex, 1 Wils. 133; Res v. Brown, 6 T. R. 186; Harper v. Carr, 7 T. R. 272; Anon., 2 Chit. 257): to proceed against a Quaker for a church-rate, (Res v. Freeman, 2 Ld. Ken. 197): to make a distress for a poor's-rate assessed upon a bishop, (Res v. The Justices of Middlesex, 2 Ld. Ken. 163; see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 6, s. 3). Also to summon a person for not paying the poor's-rate, (Anon., 2 Chit. 257): to make a warrant to levy the balance remaining in the late overseer's hands. (Res v. Pascoe and Another, 2 M. & S. 343; Res v. The Justices of Somersetshire, 2 Stra. 992; 2 Sem. Cas. 283, pl. 174; Res v. The Justices of Manchester, 1 D. & R. 454; see also 1 Nolan, P. L., 37).
